The variety "Koroneiki" is the ideal variety for-Sitia region because it is considered to be a very productive variety and suitable for warm - dry climates but sensitive to cold. Also, it is considered one of the best varieties for extra oil production, giving fine oil with excellent aroma and good taste. Its color is greenish yellow and its aroma is mean to distinctively fruity. It has a rich taste and a lasting after taste. Yet, it gives an intense bitter and spicy sensation, lending it premium balance. The lack of a great complexity in other aromas makes it unique. Its aroma of greens and fresh grass adds to its pronounced freshness. It's the combination of all the above characteristics that make the "Koroneiki" the variety of exquisite harmony in Greece and all over the world.

- 1) Ultraviolet light absorption, it consists of two constants (K232 and K268).
- 2) Organic assessment (smell, taste).

The extra virgin olive oil "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis" has particular qualitative and organoleptic characteristics in which owes its reputation worldwide. These characteristics are combination of the human factor, the environment and the cultivation technique.

The specificity of the olive oil is due to the following factors:

- Is exclusively produced from olives variety "Koroneiki".
- Low price of acidity and as a result  $K268 \leq 0,15$ .
- Color of product glowing green, green yellow.

- Medium fruit price  $\geq 3$  and medium price of bitter and spicy  $\leq 5$ . Medium defective price equal to 0.

The special quality and organoleptic characteristics of extra virgin olive oil "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis" are the result of the combination of cultivated variety, special soil conditions and the human factor with the long tradition and dedication to olive cultivation.

The cultivated variety "Koroneiki" is the ideal variety for the defined geographical area because it is suitable for dry-heat condition but cold-sensitive. "Koroneiki" is the best variety for the production olive oil for fine oil with excellent aroma and taste. The limestone soils and the high temperature contribute to increase the concentration of aromatic ingredients in olive oil and in the fruity taste in the product. The semi-mountains of the area positively affect the quality as the olive oil produced in hilly areas is considered to be of better quality.

F) Description:

- Colour of product glowing green, green yellow.
- Medium fruit price  $\geq 3$  and medium price of bitter and spicy  $\leq 5$ . Medium defective price equal to 0.
- Acidity (% by weight oleic acid)  $\leq 0,8$ , price K232  $\leq 2,30$ , price K268  $\leq 0,15$ , price of absorption in the UV spectrum 0,005 and number of peroxides (MeqO<sub>2</sub>/Kg)  $\leq 15$ .

The olive oil Sitia Lasithiou Kritis (Σητεία Λασιθίου Κρήτης) is produced in the entire territory of the province of Sitia in the Prefecture of Lasithi.

The geographical area for the production of the extra virgin olive oil "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis" is comprised of the Municipal Units of Sitia, Analipsi, Itanou and Lefkis as well as the communities of Agios Stefanos, Stavrochori and Orinou of the Municipal Unit Makri Gialou.

The aforesaid production area lies within the geographical co-ordinates as provided below:

	Latitude	Longitude
1	671863	3893370
2	671789	3877111
4	712130	3915814

The defined region "Sitia" is located on the eastern edge of Crete. It is an area of particular microclimate and protected designation of origin for its olive oil. There, after traditional cultivation and careful harvest of the olives with respect to the tree and the environment is produced the olive oil "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis" with very high quality and nutritional value.

The climate in the province "Sitia" is Mediterranean which is characterized by high temperature, low rainfall which is distributed in a few-month- period and low relative humidity. The particular feature of the region is the dominance of the north, northwest and south winds that blow throughout the year and they have an impact on the local climate.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Sitia Lasithiou Kritis (Σητεία Λασιθίου Κρήτης) in Greece has an ancient tradition as the variety is grown in the geographical area since the Minoan era. Archaeologists claim that the great floridness of the Minoan Kingdom was due to the trade of Cretan oil in those years with great success. Due to this ancient tradition and to the favourable micro-climate of the geographical area, this olive oil has obtained a longstanding reputation among consumers which extends well beyond the confines of its area of origin.

It is known that the olive tree cultivation take place in the defined geographical area from the Minoan years. At the bottom of a well full of water which was found in Kato Zakros during the excavation of the Minoan palace, there were found olive in a vessel that retained their flesh. They were aged about 3.500 years.

Kato Zakro, was the main port of the Minoan Crete. From that port, the ships that transported the Cretan olive oil began their journey to the Eastern Mediterranean (Egypt, Syria, and Minor Asia). The olive oil was traded with other products. Nowadays, the jars in which many villages store oil certainly are reminiscent of the Minoan jars in shape and size.

Also, excavations in the Minoan palace in Petra (1km from Sitia) have shown the use of olive and its products in a variety of applications even from that time:

- In the architecture for the timber floors and gallery columns.
- In the diet defined from the large jars which were found with a total capacity of 20.000liters.
- For worship purposes flavored with various herbs.
- For lighting purposes, defined from the clay and stone lamps which were found with a trace of burning on their edge.
- And also for the processing of wool and flax which is described by Homer.

Even jewelry of gold sheet representing olive tree leaves have been found in rectangular built tombs in the area of Mochlos and olive-produce facilities (troughs, millstones, clayey olive groves etc.) in Palaikastro and Zakros which dating from the early palatial era around 2.000BC. The cultivation of the olive tree continued uninterrupted from those years to the present day.

The olive tree is and has been closely tied to the daily life of the inhabitants of Sitia for thousands of years. The father's first wish for his newborn is "I wish you to live like the olive tree". The worthy bride was estimated by her olive tree dowry and the family's best olive grove was inherited to the firstborn son. Every housewife dedicated to the church a bottle of the first milled oil every year, to thank God for the good harvest, certainly a continuation of the ancient tradition of offering to the gods. In times of difficulty, such as when an infant gone sick, the mother dedicated her child's weight in olive oil to a Saint. Also, usually the babies were smeared with olive oil in order to produce strong bones. The olive oil is an important part of Sitia's diet on a daily basis as well and the olives. Olive wood is used as fuel and shoots as animal food.

I) Method of Production:

Sitia Lasithiou Kritis (Σητεία Λασιθίου Κρήτης) is produced from clean olives of Koroneiki variety which are pressed and processed in traditional or centrifugal olive mills which provide excellent processing conditions. The olive fruit fly is treated by ground-level spraying or by biological methods.

1) Cultivation technique

General in our region "Sitia" the soil treatment for the best use of soil moisture, soil ventilation and weed control is mainly done by mechanical means. The majority of the olive groves are irrigated.

Irrigation is necessary due to the conditions in the area and can be extended over a period of 6 months. Generally is done with water – saving systems.

The main pest problem is considered to be insect infestation whereas fungal diseases are rare due to the low relative humidity of the area. The main pest infestation is from Dacus oleae and it is usually treated with soil bait spraying or other biological methods.

2) Harvest

Harvest period usually begins in November, depending on the weather conditions and is determined by the maturation stage of the fruit. According to the literature, when the olive begins to turn its colour from greenish-yellow to purplish-black it has the highest olive oil content and the best quality. The harvest is mainly done by machines.

3) Transportation and milling of olives

The transportation of the harvested olives from the field to the oil mill of the delimited area is carried out by sparse weaving sack suitable for food and also by plastic boxes in order to ensure good ventilation and to prevent fungi growth. The use of plastic bags is prohibited. The milling of the olive is done within 48 hours from the harvest.

The transportation of the olive fruit and its storage for many hours before the extraction at high temperature and insufficient ventilation affects negatively the quality of the olive oil. More sufficient airing is provided in crates, which constitute the best means of transportation and storage of the olive fruit. Sacks must be kept in a cool and properly ventilated place and the extraction of the olive oil must be completed as soon as possible (in less than 48 hours).

The first step in the production line is washing. The olives are washed with drinkable water to ensure that all dirt, leaves and foreign materials are removed so that they don't contaminate the oil.

In the next phase, the olives proceed to the stainless steel crusher, which crushes the entire olive, including the pit into an olive paste. This step is important because the amount of crushing and texture of the paste can change the quality of the olive oil. The olive paste is a chunky particle paste, not creamy or mashed.

The olive paste is transferred to a large steel tank for malaxation. The tank contains a large steel rotator that constantly stirs the paste as it is heated to 27°C. After approximately 30-35 minutes, the paste is ready to proceed to the next step. This part of the process is called "cold milling" or "cold export". At this point, the naturally occurring enzymes are developing the taste and aroma of the olive oil, so it is a very important stage.

In the centrifuge, the flesh of the olive along with the pit is separated from the juice of the olive. At this stage, the resulting olive juice is a combination of oil and a little bit of sediment water from the olive residue. The final stage separates these two elements, leaving only the natural olive oil (pure and natural fruit juice) to be transported to storage tanks and wait bottling.

4) Storage and transportation of olive oil

The olive oil is stored in stainless steel tanks. During the storage period if it is necessary, the solid substances are removed, the liquids substances are filtered and the olive oil is removed in a clean tank. The oil mill keeps traceability files with the producers, the dates and the number of tanks.

The transportation of the olive oil from the oil mill to the packing machine is done by barrels suitable for olive oils which comply with the current legislation.

5) Bottling

The bottling of the olive oil “Sitia Lasithiou Kritis” is done in bottling areas which are registered in special registers at the Hellenic Agricultural Organization - Dimitra (website: <https://www.elgo.gr>). They comply with the current EU and national legislation. For the packaging are used containers suitable for olive oil up to 5 liters capacity.

In this stage before the bottling the extra virgin olive oil is filtered to remove any remaining fruit particles from the clear olive oil. The extra virgin olive oil bottled in glass bottles or tin cans, labeled, boxed, palletized and shipped around the world.

I) Uniqueness:

Sitia Lasithiou Kritis (Σητεία Λασιθίου Κρήτης) is highly reputed oil which is produced from a variety traditionally cultivated in the area, which has a favourable micro-climate (high sunshine, little rainfall, dry conditions, calcareous soils). It is produced using traditional processing methods within the boundaries of the geographical area.

Specificity of the geographical area

The climate in the defined geographical area is Mediterranean which is characterized by high temperature, low rainfall which is distributed in a few-month- period and low relative humidity. The particular feature of the region is the dominance of the north, northwest and south winds that blow throughout the year and they have an impact on the local climate.

In the defined region there aren't big temperature fluctuations. The average annual temperature is 18-20°C, the coldest month is January with an average temperature of 12,2°C and the warmest month is July with 25,9°C. Rainfall is concentrated in the months October – March with an average annual rainfall of 478,9mm. Humidity is low, especially in the summer with an average annual rate of 66, 4%. Snowfall is a rare phenomenon, as well as the snowfall in the surrounding mountains.

Due to the location of the island we have the highest sunshine rare in Greece. From April to September we have about 350 hours of sunshine per month while the average annual sunshine is more than 2.800 hours.

The delimited geographical area is located to the eastern edge of Crete and it is mostly semi-mountainous and mountainous, dominated by limestone soils. These generally come from sedimentary deposits. The predominant soil types found are:

- Red earth and gravel soil, limestone disintegrates (bare rocky limestone soils).
- Clay and stony soils. They are found in the lowlands of the province.
- Acidic soils. They are found in plateau Chandra.
- The soil in the most olive tree field is medium-sides (clay-sandy and sandy-clayey), medium depth and with neutral to slightly pH (7-7, 5) due to the content of calcium.

The natural and human factors involved in the uniqueness of “Sitia Lasithiou Kritis” can be summed up herein under:

- Geology:

The rocks prevailing in the territory of the defined area are mainly of alpine age, limestone, marble and shale. There are three basic rock zones namely, the inferior one, which is called Plattenkalk in the form of marble plates, the intermediate, comprising dark red phyllite and shale, called Phyllites-quartzites, and the superior, made up of limestone, dolomite, flysch, sandstone, clay and conglomerate rocks and called Tripolitsa. Over a more limited area, mainly in the northern part, there are more recent post-alpine rocks, the Miocene, Pleiocen and Pleistocene.

- Climate:

In the defined region there aren't big temperature fluctuations. The average annual temperature is 18-20°C, the coldest month is January with an average temperature of 12,2°C and the warmest month is July with 25,9°C. Rainfall is concentrated in the months October – March with an average annual rainfall of 478,9mm. Humidity is low, especially in the summer with an average annual rate of 66, 4%. Snowfall is a rare phenomenon, as well as the snowfall in the surrounding mountains.

Due to the location of the island we have the highest sunshine rate in Greece. From April to September we have about 350 hours of sunshine per month while the average annual sunshine is more than 2.800 hours. There are more aromatic ingredients in areas with long periods of sunshine.

These specific temperature and humidity conditions give a unique and excellent quality in the olive oil "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis".

The delimited geographical area is located to the eastern edge of Crete and it is mostly semi-mountainous and mountainous, dominated by limestone soils. These generally come from sedimentary deposits. The predominant soil types found are:

- Red earth and gravel soil, limestone disintegrates (bare rocky limestone soils).
- Clay and stony soils. They are found in the lowlands of the province.
- Acidic soils. They are found in plateau Chandra.
- The soil in the most olive tree field is medium-sides (clay-sandy and sandy-clayey), medium depth and with neutral to slightly pH (7-7,5) due to the content of calcium.

The olive oil that is produced from olive trees in dry, rocky limestone soils has more aromatic ingredients than the one produced in moist-clay soils.

- Water:

The olive tree is resistant to drought, but responds to the supply of water. The irrigation method is low volume system, mainly drip systems – suitable for soils with slope) which can supply a higher water quantity per minute. The period of the irrigation in the province Sitia is:

- Winter months (when there is insufficient rainfall).
- April - May just before the bloom.
- May – June (period of intense olive fruit development).
- August – September (period of increase the oil content).

- Harvest:

Harvest period usually begins in November until January, depending on the weather conditions and is determined by the maturation stage of the fruit. According to the literature, when the olive begins to turn its color from greenish-yellow to purplish-black it has the highest olive oil content and the best quality. The harvest is mainly done by machines.

- Human factors:

The human factor is the most important factor of the olive cultivation and the production of extra virgin olive oil GI "Sitia Lasithiou Kritis". The producers have long experience in the olive cultivation and above all dedicate to the olive tree and production of extra virgin olive oil. The long history and experience give them the ability and opportunity to combine tradition and past elements of growing along with technology, science and studies' results in order to get the best outcome in extra virgin olive oil production.

The extra virgin olive oil “Sitia Lasithiou Kritis” has high quality and organoleptic characteristics and these give it its worldwide reputation. These characteristics are combination of the human factor, the environment and the cultivation technique.

The harvest is done the right time because of the experience of producers and the small lot. That is when the olive begins to turn its color from greenish-yellow to purplish-black. In this stage the olives have the highest olive oil content and the best quality. The bags for transporting the olives are of plant origin and allow the olives to breathe for as long as they remain in the bags. The transportation is immediate (normally the same day) to the olive press. Also, the pressing is done the same day, the kneading of olives in temperature < 27°C (cold pressing) and the storage of olive oil in stainless steel tanks.

The olive tree is and has been closely tied to the daily life of the inhabitants of Sitia for thousands of years. The father's first wish for his newborn is “I wish you to live like the olive tree”. The worthy bride was estimated by her olive tree dowry and the family's best olive grove was inherited to the firstborn son. Every housewife dedicated to the church a bottle of the first milled oil every year, to thank God for the good harvest, certainly a continuation of the ancient tradition of offering to the gods. In times of difficulty, such as when an infant gone sick, the mother dedicated her child's weight in olive oil to a Saint. Also, usually the babies were smeared with olive oil in order to produce strong bones. The olive oil is an important part of Sitia's diet on a daily basis as well and the olives. Olive wood is used as fuel and shoots as animal food.

The producers have small family-owned farms and they protect the olive tree and the produced olive oil since the Minoan years. They cultivate the olive trees with respect both to themselves and to the produced olive oil.

Summarized the uniqueness of extra virgin olive oil is a combination of the following:

- The variety “Koroneiki” provide olive oil of top-quality characteristics.
- The specific climate conditions (high temperature, low humidity) in the province give a unique and excellent quality in the olive oil “Sitia Lasithiou Kritis”.
- The olive oil that is produced from olive trees in dry, rocky limestone soils and semi mountain areas has more aromatic ingredients.
- The great experience of the human factor.
- The immediately transportation of the olive fruit.
- The milling of the olive is done within 48 hours from the harvest.
- The condition of transportation and storage of the olive fruit.
- The stage of malaxation in 27°C “cold export” in which the naturally occurring enzymes are developing the taste and aroma of the olive oil, so it is a very important stage.

Organoleptic characteristics:

Description	Average Value
Olive Fruitiness	3-5
Bitterness	2-3
Pungency	2-4

'Kalamata' PDO olive oil has medium fruitiness, with an aroma of green fruit, light bitterness and light to medium pungency. Colour: green to yellowish-green.

F) Description:

'Kalamata' olive oil is produced from select varieties of 'Koroneiki' and 'Mastoeidis' olives and all the oil produced is classed as extra virgin olive oil, as the acidity is well below the maximum permitted limit, and the other parameters (peroxide value and extinction coefficient K232) are below the highest permitted levels laid down in the European Union regulation.

It also has a very specific fatty acid profile, which is a characteristic of 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil. The percentage of oleic acid is very high, while the linoleic, stearic, palmitoleic and palmitic acid values are very specific and so is the ratio between them, which distinguishes the oil from other olive oils. This specific fatty acid profile together with the medium fruitiness and the aroma of green fruit, the light bitterness and mild pungency give 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil its specific, unique character.

'Kalamata' olive oil is produced within the administrative boundaries of the regional Unit of Messinia, which is a subdivision of the region of the Peloponnese. The area is bordered to the north by the river Neda and the mountains of Arcadia, to the east by the Taïgetos, to the south by the Gulf of Messinia and to the west by the Ionian Sea. The olive groves cover an area of approximately a million square meters (100000 hectares).

The defined geographical area lies at the south-western end of the Peloponnese and covers an area of 2 991 square kilometres.

The eastern part of Messinia is dominated by the Taïgetos mountain range, which also forms the natural boundary with the Prefecture of Laconia.

The Taïgetos extends for 115 kilometres, with the highest peak rising to 2.400 metres, and creates the area's microclimate. The largest and most fertile plain is the Messinian plain, followed by other smaller ones such as the plains of Kiparissia, Gargaliani, Pylos, Methoni, Koroni, Longa and Petalidi.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

The beginnings of olive growing in the defined geographical area are lost in the mists of time. This can be seen from archaeological finds and written records that have been preserved and attest to the fact the olives and olive oil were consumed as food, used as a basis for perfume and were a subject for art.

Excavations at the Palace of Nestor near Chora uncovered 1200 clay tablets inscribed in the Linear B script, which provide valuable information on the role of the olive tree and how it shaped the lives of the local people in the 14th-13th centuries BC.

Olive stones dating back to 1900 BC have been found in the Karpofora area. Using the pollen diagram method, based on radiochronology, estimates have been made regarding olive growing in the Pylos area. It was found that olives were being grown as far back as 1100 BC and they were mainly the cultivated variety.

The 'Koroneiki' variety is native to Messinia, as shown by its name, which means that it came from Koroni, a small coastal town in the south-eastern part of the defined geographical area. Olive oil was traded from the ports of Methoni and Navarino (the modern town of Pylos). Greek traders supplemented their cargo with oil from the area around Kiparissia.

The olive groves on public land were planted on Turkish properties that had fallen into the hands of the Venetian conquerors and were rented to farmers. To meet the demand, some olive oil also came from outside the Koroni area, and from Mani and more generally from all over Messinia.

I) Method of Production:

Cultivation, production and milling must take place solely within the geographical area defined above (clause 8). The olive oil must be produced and initially stored in factories located within the defined geographical area which comply with all the EU and national food production rules in force and are equipped with stainless steel machinery and stainless steel storage tanks.

a) Harvesting, transportation and storage of the olives

In most areas, the olives are harvested by being shaken down, by hand or with combs, or by machines (shakers) when the fruit turns from green to yellowish-green and until 50 % has turned an inky colour, from the end of October for around 4-6 weeks, depending on the prevailing weather conditions.

Harvesting is always done using olive nets, which are spread out below the trees. Fruit that has fallen to the ground (windfalls) must never be harvested for milling. The olives are transported to the olive mills in rigid, ventilated, plastic crates or in sacks made solely from plant material, with a capacity of 30-50 kg. They must be transported to the mills and milled within 24 hours under the best possible conditions (storage away from the light and on pallets so that the air can circulate and there is no direct contact with the ground), in order to prevent any deterioration.

Until they are milled, the olives must be kept cool. No more than 24 hours may elapse between the harvesting of the fruit and the production of the extra virgin 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil. It is forbidden to store the olives in the olive groves, where they are exposed to various natural and microbiological hazards.

b) Processing the olives

The olives are processed in traditional or centrifugal oil mills, where the temperature of the olive paste is kept below 27 °C during malaxation and all the other stages of processing. In the mill, the fruit is separated from the leaves and the twigs, washed and sent to the crusher.

The olive paste then undergoes malaxation for 20-30 minutes and the oil is extracted either by pressure or centrifugation, with minimal water added in cases where the olives do not contain sufficient plant fluids.

The olive mills must be located within the boundaries of Messinia.

Specific rules concerning slicing, grating, packaging, etc:

'Kalamata' olive oil must be stored in stainless steel tanks located in suitable storage facilities, at a temperature not exceeding 24 °C.

The facilities where the olive oil is stored at first may be located in the mills where it is produced.

The olive oil may be transported from the mill to the storage facilities at the bottling plants only in special stainless steel tanks that have been meticulously cleaned. The oil may be bottled either within or outside the defined geographical area, provided that there is a reliable traceability system and that it is properly labelled.

For wholesale trade, the product may be transported in stainless steel tanks, which are sealed as soon as they are filled and are properly labelled, provided a reliable traceability system is in place.

For retail sale, all packaging holding up to 5 litres is allowed provided that it complies with the rules laid down in both EU and Greek legislation.

Specific rules on labelling:

The labelling must include a code made up of letters and figures indicating the serial number of the label and the last two figures of the year of production, set out as follows: KA/label serial number/last two figures of the year of production.

J) Uniqueness:

'Kalamata' olive oil is produced from select varieties of 'Koroneiki' and 'Mastoeidis' olives and all the oil produced is classed as extra virgin olive oil, as the acidity is well below the maximum permitted limit, and the other parameters (peroxide value and extinction coefficient K232) are below the highest permitted levels laid down in the European Union regulation.

It also has a very specific fatty acid profile, which is a characteristic of 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil. The percentage of oleic acid is very high, while the linoleic, stearic, palmitoleic and palmitic acid values are very specific and so is the ratio between them, which distinguishes the oil from other olive oils. This specific fatty acid profile together with the medium fruitiness and the aroma of green fruit, the light bitterness and mild pungency give 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil its specific, unique character.

The factors that give the raw material its specific characteristics, which are imparted to 'Kalamata' olive oil, are:

- the area's excellent climate: a combination of long hours of sunshine, optimal rainfall (around 750- 800 mm), mild winters and long, hot, dry summers,

- the moderately strong winds and the hilly terrain in combination with the cup-shaped form created by the farmers' pruning (3-4 main branches per tree and removal of part of the foliage from within), which mean that the olive groves have optimal exposure to light and are well aired, so the fruit ripens properly, factors that determine the specific characteristics of the oil produced, which is rich in pigments, with an intense colour and a pleasant taste. Messinia's hilly terrain does not always allow olive growing to be mechanised or the fruit to be harvested by machine, so traditional methods are still used (pruning, rotivation, harvesting),

- the light, calcareous soils with neutral to alkaline pH. The calcareous soil, which prevents the trees absorbing iron more effectively than other soils and can retain water much better, which in turn means that olive trees grown in this type of soil do not dry out so easily in times of drought. The organoleptic characteristics of 'Kalamata' PDO olive oil are largely due to the aromatic substances that are formed because of the specific characteristics of the soil (light, calcareous soils) and the fact that the trees have a reduced water intake, because rainfall is low when the fruit is ripening and the olive trees grown for olive oil production in the defined geographical area receive limited irrigation, — sufficient concentrations of phosphorus, magnesium, manganese, boron, etc. In particular, the presence of manganese (an element which is a catalyst for many enzymatic and biochemical processes and also plays a decisive role in the formation of chlorophyll) and magnesium (an element which plays a decisive role in the formation of the chlorophyll molecule) is crucial in producing an oil that has the characteristic yellowish-green colour and is rich in aromatic substances,

— the producers' experience in deciding on the best period for harvesting the olives. Unripe olives produce olive oil with an intense green colour and bitterish taste with few aromatic constituents. On the other hand, if the olives are harvested when they are past the physiological stage of ripening the level of aromatic constituents diminishes, acidity increases and there is a change in colour,

— optimal processing conditions, which help produce an extra virgin olive oil with a fruity aroma of medium intensity, a light bitterness and light to medium pungency with high amounts of total sterols. Malaxation of the olive paste takes place at temperatures lower than 27 °C, for a short period of time and with limited use of water, so as to prevent the incorporation of air, oxidation and the loss of aromatic constituents. The result is a high quality olive oil that is resistant to oxidation,

— the small size of the parcels allows the Messinian olive farmers to take great care of their trees and produce a high quality olive oil.

F) Description of Goods:

BAROLO is a red wine from the Piedmont region in the north-western part of Italy. BAROLO is a wine produced exclusively from the "Nebbiolo" grapes (a red grape full of delicious tannins and a high level of acidity) in its "Michet", "Lampia", "Rose" sub-varieties.

The wines are made from Nebbiolo, a small, thin skinned red grape varietal generally high in acid and tannins. In Piedmont, Nebbiolo is one of the first varieties to undergo budbreak and last to be picked, with harvest generally taking place in late October. BAROLO wines must be solely composed of Nebbiolo, no exceptions.

BAROLO is often compared to the great Pinot Noirs of Burgundy, due to its light brick-garnet pigments and bright acidity-plus the region it is made in has a lot that is aesthetically common to Burgundy too. Rose flower, tar, and dried herbs are aromas frequently associated with BAROLO wines. According to DOCG regulations, the wines must be aged for at least two years in oak and one year in bottle, with five years of age (three in oak) required for Riserva labeling. Both with a minimum 13 percent alcohol content.

The production area of grapes suitable for making the BAROLO wine, includes the whole territories of the municipalities of Barolo, Castiglione Falletto, and Serralunga d'Alba and part of the territories of the municipalities of Monforte d'Alba, Novello, La Morra, Verduno, Grinzane Cavour, Diano d'Alba, Cherasco and Roddi, all of them being located in the province of Cuneo.

The boundaries of the area begin from the Village of Verduno, continuing around the areas till Ciocchino. From Ciocchino this boundary line follows along the Bricco Ambrogio Country line till Talloria Di Castiglione stream. Following the same in the south-western direction, the boundaries extend along till Falletto, which is the border along the municipalities of Serralunga from Montelupo and Sinio. These boundaries continue along the latter border till Monforte and Monchiero. It follows the latter border until it reaches the Rataldo stream and the border between the municipalities of Novello, Monchiero and Monforte. It then follows the Rataldo river downstream until the latter flows into the dei Mosca stream, which it then follows upstream until it reaches the municipality of Novello. From there, the boundary line continues along the Corini country road, reaching Narzole and La Morra crossing the Barolo province and reaching Cherasco-La Morra along the westward direction. From this point, the boundary line follows said provincial road as far as S. Michele along the existing country road until the border between the municipalities of Cherasco and La Morra. It then follows the latter border bending in a north-eastern direction and reaches, following a straight line, Presa. From here, the boundary line follows the municipal road called "dei Garassini", which reaches the provincial road to Pollenzo after crossing C. Dabene. It then follows said provincial road towards Cascina Roggeri until reaching the border between the municipalities of La Morra and Verduno and the junction for Cogni. It then continues southwards along the border between the municipalities of La Morra and Verduno as far as Cogni, where, after reaching the provincial road, it follows the latter as far as Verduno, the starting point of the boundary line.

The aforesaid production area lies within the geographical co-ordinates as provided below:

Direction	Latitude	Longitude

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

The Consorzio di Tutela Barolo Barbaresco Alba Langhe e Roero (Consortium for the Protection of BAROLO Wine ) hereinafter also defined as “the Applicant” or “the Consortium” is an inter-professional organization, which has been entrusted by the Italian Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Forest Policies to protect, inter alia, the controlled and guaranteed designation of origin “BAROLO.”

Right at the start of the 20th century, producers of Barolo and Barbaresco wine decided to unite their forces and, in 1908, created the original ‘certificate of authentic origin’ which was awarded by an association formed from a combination of local administrative bodies, together with the wine producers’ trade union. It was not until 1924, however, that the Italian parliament passed a law on ‘typical wines’ defining their characteristics, which had to remain constant in time.

It was in this way that foundations were laid for the constitution of the ‘Consortium for the Protection of Quality of Local Wines Barolo and Barbaresco,’ officially founded in 1934. In 1963, the law 930 introduced the concept of Denomination of Origin and defined the precise role of the Wine Consortia.

The Alba Consortium immediately sought Doc Denomination status for Barolo and Barbaresco – which was granted in 1966, with DOCG status arriving in 1980. In 1984, the Ministry of Agriculture officially entrusted the Consortium with guardianship of the two prestigious reds. In 1994, following the issuing of a new law (law 164 of 1992), the old-style Consortium made way for the new, widening its jurisdiction to cover all Denominations produced exclusively in the Langa region. Today, in fact, the Consortium can be said to represent not only its wine denominations but also the entire wine territory.

Aspects of protection of the wines of the Langhe as a whole were perfected in the 2007 to 2009 period, with the entrusting, on the part of the Ministry of Agriculture to the Consortium, controls of all DOCG and Doc wines within its legal jurisdiction, thereby including Dogliani, Barbera d, Alba, Dolcetto (in the various guises), Langhe, Nebbiolo d, Alba and Verduno Pelaverga in addition to Barbaresco and Barolo, thereby guaranteeing them the benefits of perfect traceability.

In the mid-1800s, when Camillo Benso, Count of Cavour (also a leader of the movement for Italian unification), saw an opportunity to modernize his family’s estate in Grinzane by improving the wine-making technique and introducing a monoculture of vines. He enlisted the help of Frenchman Louis Oudart as his oenologist (winemaking expert), who was able to ferment the Nebbiolo completely dry, making the first modern Barolo.

A noblewoman named Giulietta Falletti, Marchioness of Barolo – also enlisting help from Louis Oudart for her vast estate in La Morra, Serralunga d’Alba, and Barolo – developed a Bordeaux-style wine which attracted the attention of King Carlo Alberto di Savoia. This wine, says Falletti, was called “Barolo.” It was a wine so superb, that it allegedly later inspired King Carlo Alberto di Savoia to purchase the estates of Verduno and Roddi for wine production.

Meanwhile around the same time, Emanuele Alberto Guerrieri – the illegitimate son of Vittorio Emanuele II, Count of Mirafiori and the first king of Italy – began planting vines around a family refuge called Fontanafredda, near Serralunga d’Alba. Today, Fontanafredda remains one of the most well-known Barolo producers and one of the largest contiguous properties.

It was this association with Italy’s then reigning dynasty that earned it its nickname “the wine of kings, the king of wines,” which it still proudly holds to this day.

I) Method of Production:

The grapes for Production of BAROLO are harvested exclusively and must yield wine with a minimum natural alcohol volume of 12.50 degrees. The wine must be aged for at least three years, of which at least two in oak-wood of chestnut-wood barrels. Up to 15% of younger Barolo wine may be added to the same type of older aged Barolo wine, and vice versa, for the purpose of improvement. After the mandatory ageing period, the “Barolo” controlled and guaranteed designation of origin wine shall undergo a sampling test by an ad-hoc committee based out of Alba. These operations are also allowed in the entire administrative territory of the provinces of Arezzo, Florence, Pisa, Pistoia, Prato and Siena, as well as the neighbouring provinces of Grosseto, Livorno and Lucca.

Ageing and Bottle-ageing

The wine must be aged for at least three years, of Which at least two in oak-wood or chestnut-wood barrels. The ageing period shall start on the 1st of January of the year following the vintage year. Up to 15% of younger Barolo wine may be added to the same type of older aged Barolo wine, and vice versa, for the purpose of improvement.

Packaging

The bottles used for the marketing of the “Barolo” wine must be of the “Albeisa” shape or else shaped in conformity with the customary and/or traditional standards; their capacity must be in line with the legislation in force, however it shall not be less than 350 cc. The bottles must be made of dark glass and closed with a cork stopper. It shall be prohibited to package and display bottles in such a way as to mislead consumers and/or be prejudicial to the high repute of the wine.

Labelling, Designation & Presentation

The label shall specify the millesimal portion of the wine that is predominant. After the mandatory ageing period, the “Barolo” controlled and guaranteed designation of origin wine shall undergo a sampling test by an ad-hoc committee, usually at the State agrarian school specializing in winegrowing and wine-making techniques located in Alba, where the committee has its headquarters. The designation of origin “BAROLO” is exclusively and obligatorily distinguished by a certification mark BAROLO. Such mark is always included in the neck sticker replacing the government seal.

All wine makers entered in the register of wine bottlers are also entitled to apply the mark, distributed solely by the Applicant, separately on the bottles. Use of the mark is supervised directly by the Applicant, which shall distribute it to all the wine bottling and packaging operators who apply for the same, on the same economic terms and conditions of use reserved for its associates.

J) Uniqueness:

BAROLO is the result of a unique combination of the grape varieties of the “Nebbiolo” variety in its “Michel”, “Lampia”, and “Rose” sub-varieties grown in the whole territories of the municipalities of Barolo, Castiglione Falletto, and Serralunga d’Alba and part of the territories of the municipalities of Monforte d’Alba, Novello, La Morra, Verduno, Grinzane Cavour, Diano d’Alba, Cherasco and Roddi, all of them being located in the province of Cuneo.

The uniqueness of the wine can further be attributed to the following factors:

- (i) The unique natural environmental and cultivation conditions of vineyards.
- (ii) The environmental and growing conditions of the vineyards that are intended for the production of the “Barolo” wine must be those that are traditional to this area and in any - event must be only those that are suitable for conferring the specific qualitative features on the grapes and the wine produced therefrom.

- (iii) The physical characteristics, texture and chemical-physical structure of the soils make determinant contribution, together with meticulous selection of the grape varieties and of the relative rootstocks, to obtaining the particular organoleptic and chemical-physical characteristics of "Barolo" wine.

Cultivation limitation:

The cultivation limitation of the vineyards contributes to the exclusive production of the BAROLO wine. The maximum yield per hectare of specialized cultivation in the vineyards is ought to not be in excess of 80 quintals of grapes. Said limitation of cultivation is required to be respected in exceptionally favourable seasons, by means of a careful selection of the grapes, on condition that the total production does not exceed the aforementioned threshold by over 20%. The maximum grape-to-wine yield rate shall not be in excess of 70% at the first decanting and may not be in excess of 65% after the mandatory ageing period.

The competent regional bodies by September 20th of each year are required to, by way of indication, decide, the mean unitary production of grapes and the starting date of the vintage, after hearing the opinions of the professional organizations and the organizations and institutions concerned.

Any farmer envisaging higher yields than those specified are required to timely notify the estimated higher yield in question, in any case by no later than five days prior to the starting date of their own vintage, which they shall also specify, by sending a registered letter to the geographically competent bodies of the Piedmont Region in order for the latter to carry out the appropriate checks.

Characteristics of the soil:

The relevant soil mainly consists of clay and limestone.

K) Inspection Body:

In order to guarantee authenticity and protection of the consumer, the BAROLO Denomination is subject to the control and certification activities of the Consortium, originally established in Alba on 23.6, 1994 with notary deed Fabrizio Donotti collection number 4.293 (and subsequent modification in Alba on 2.4.2012 with notary deed Paola Ferrero number 9480).

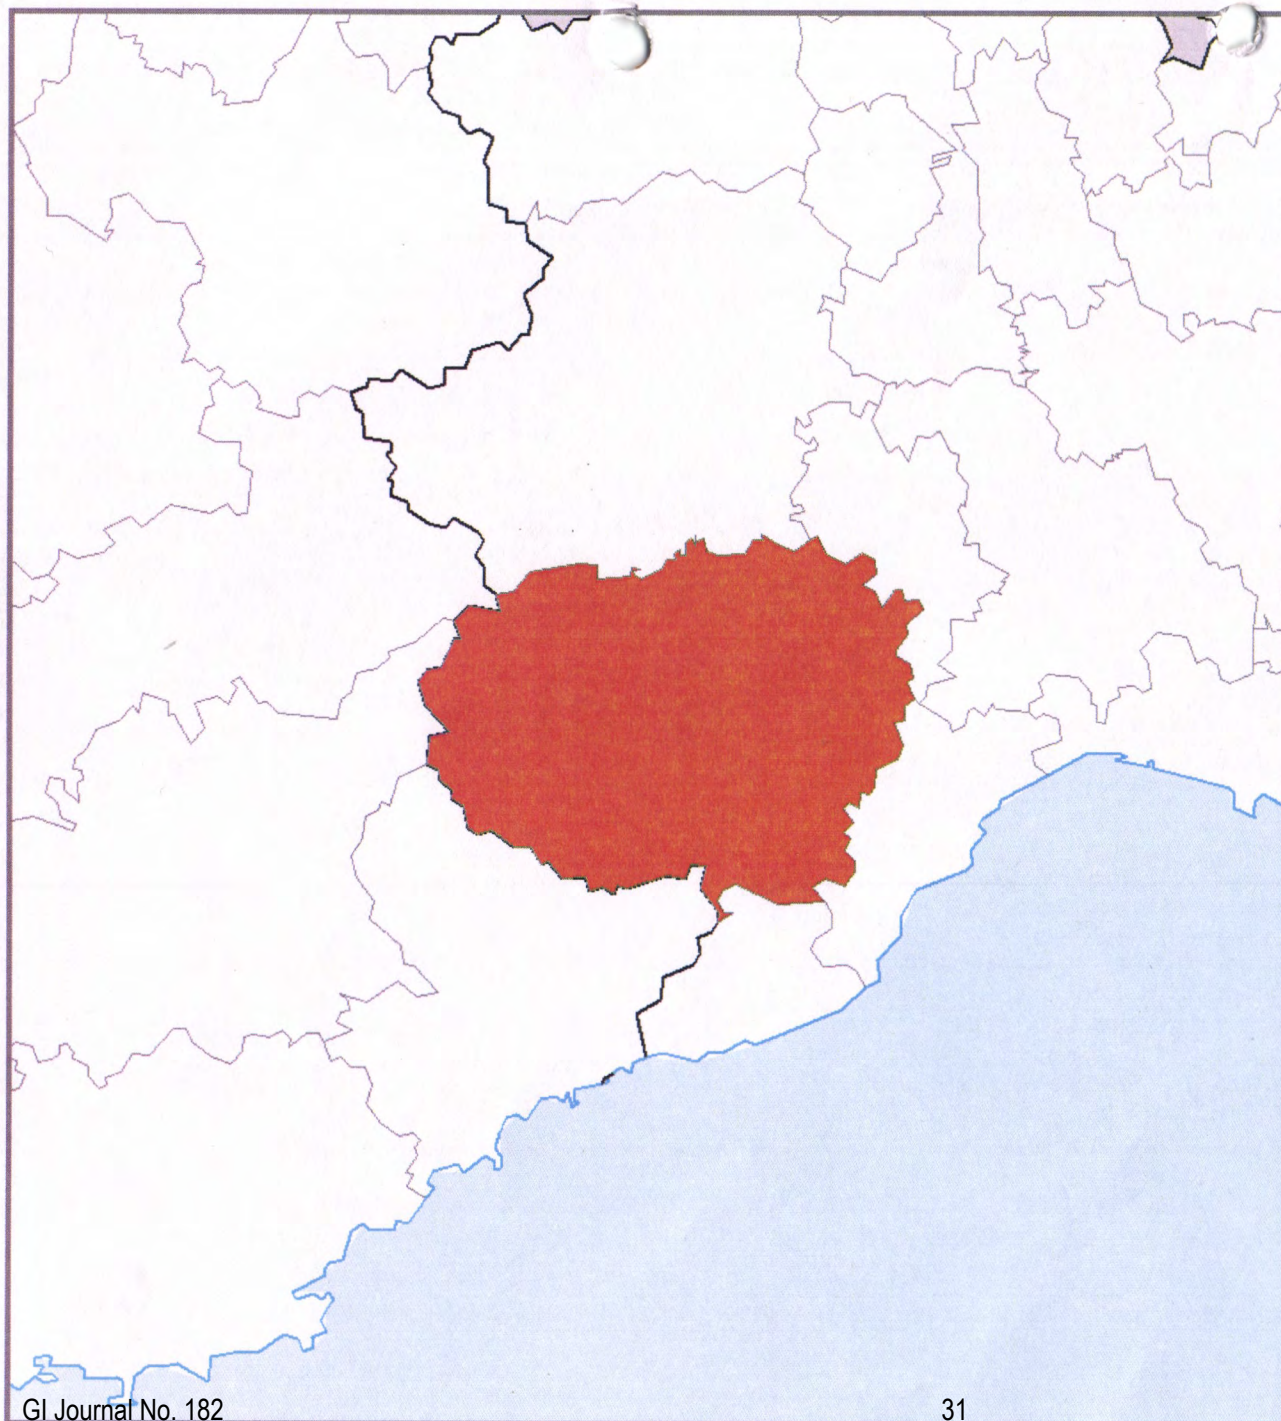

The protection consortium, if representative of at least 40% of the winemakers and at least 66% of the production pertaining to the vineyards registered in the vineyard registered as required by art. 1, paragraph 3 of the Ministerial Decree of 16 December 2010, is appointed by Mipaaf to carry out the erga omnes functions referred to in art. 17 paragraph 4 of Legislative Decree 61/2010. and therefore deals with the protection, promotion, enhancement, consumer information and general care of the interests of the protected denominations, towards all the producers of the same denominations, even if they are not members of the consortium.

Banglar Muslin is the one of the popular traditional handloom craft of Bengal. This finest sort of muslin is made of cotton, which are spun to create threads that maintained tensile strength at counts (above 300 Counts and upto 600 Counts) i.e., higher than any other cotton products. Thus, Banglar Muslin fabric is the finest variety of muslin fabrics weighing less than 48 grams per square metre and the count of Banglar muslin fabric yarn is mostly between 300<sup>s</sup> - 500<sup>s</sup> metric count in warp/weft.

Structural specification of Banglar muslin fabric

(i)	Structural	Plain weave
(ii)	Type of loom used	Pit Loom

(iii)	Yarn type (warp/weft)	300 <sup>S</sup> - 500 <sup>S</sup> metric count in warp/weft
(iv)	Length of fabric	11 meters
(v)	Width of fabric	0.90 meter
(vi)	Design	Plain
(vii)	Yarn used in the selvedge	300 <sup>S</sup> metric count

A particular weight of cotton is processed for making yarn of specific count and as the metric count increases the fabric weight (GSM) decreases making this variety of muslin the lightest fabrics. The number of yarns in the fabric varies from 112 to 124 per inch depending on the fabric geometry.

The Banglar Muslin is a delicate handspun yarn produced by the skilled weaver of Bengal at the early morning hours as it needs high humidity and low temperature to spin and to weave. This appropriate humidity and temperature is generally obtained between 5.00 AM to 9.30 AM in West Bengal. The yarns of Banglar muslin fabric are produced through a hand spinning process especially in five spindles Wooden Ambar Charkha. The cotton lint and seed were separated by hand. Sliver making, doubling and drafting is further carried out in a manual operated machine known as Belni unit. There is a unique way of starching of warp yarns, and making of warper's beam. The traditional yarn treatment of muslin fabric is done in the following mannner:

- Soaking the yarn in water containing lemon juice. Yarn is kept immersed for 5-6 days for better fermentation with change of water. Soaking effects bleaching.
- Preparation of Panta bhat (fermented rice): It is rice-based fermentation prepared by soaking rice in water overnight. The rice is smashed by hand and applied to the yarn by hank in a slowly manner.

F) Description:

Muslin, a plain-woven cotton fabric made in various weights. The better qualities of muslin are fine and smooth in texture and are woven from evenly spun warps and wefts. They are given a soft finish, bleached or piece-dyed, and are sometimes patterned in the loom or printed. The coarser varieties are often of irregular yarns and textures, bleached, unbleached, or piece-dyed and are generally finished by the application of sizing.

The Banglar muslin is made of cotton, which are spun to create threads that maintained tensile strength at counts (above 300 Counts and upto 600 Counts) i.e., higher than any other cotton products. Banglar Muslin fabric is the finest variety of muslin fabrics weighing less than 48 grams per square metre and the count of Banglar muslin fabric yarn is mostly between 300<sup>S</sup> - 500<sup>S</sup> metric count in warp/weft.

The Banglar Muslin is a delicate handspun yarn produced by the skilled weaver of Bengal at the early morning hours as it needs high humidity and low temperature to spin and to weave. This appropriate humidity and temperature is generally obtained between 5.00 AM to 9.30 AM in West Bengal. The yarns of Banglar muslin fabric are produced through a hand spinning process especially in five spindles Wooden Ambar Charkha. The cotton lint and seed were separated by hand. Sliver making, doubling and drafting is further carried out in a manual operated machine known as Belni unit. There is a unique way of starching of warp yarns, and making of warper's beam. The traditional yarn treatment of muslin fabric is done in the following manner:

- Soaking the yarn in water containing lemon juice. Yarn is kept immersed for 5-6 days for better fermentation with change of water. Soaking effects bleaching.
- Preparation of Panta bhat (fermented rice): It is rice-based fermentation prepared by soaking rice in water overnight. The rice is smashed by hand and applied to the yarn by hank in a slowly manner.

This finest muslin woven in India is so soft and fine that an entire garment can pass through a signet ring. The fabric had such a high standing internationally even hundreds of years ago that it was believed to be used as shrouds for Egyptian Mummies. Apparently, the best time to spin the yarn was in the early hours of the day or late afternoon, when the humidity and temperatures were just right. Most of the spinners were young nimble-fingered girls with excellent vision, between the age of eighteen and thirty. These skilled artisans came from certain families around East India and had spun the yarn for generations.

Banglar muslin fabrics are being produced from “Suvín” variety of cotton.

History

The word 'Muslin' came from Mosul, a town in Mesopotamia (now Iraq) on the river Tigris just opposite the old remains of Nineveh. Very fine cotton cloth was made at Mosul in the twelfth century A.D and afterward. The Arab merchants took it to Europe as merchandise. The enchanted European called it 'Muslin'. Muslin fabrics are one of the outstanding features of Bengal's past civilization and trade. Cossimbazar is a small town about four km from Berhampore (in Murshidabad). The part of the Bhagirathi which bifurcated from Padma and joined the Jalangi was called Cossimbazar river and the triangular land surrounded by the Padma, Bhagirathi and Jalangi was called Cossimbazar Island. It was a big trading island for Muslin and silk and had trading centres (kuthis) of different European people. In 1670, Streynsham Master told that the places like Malda, Shantipur, Hooghly etc. of West Bengal, India use to make muslins.

Modern historians like Tapan Roy Chowdhury and Irfan Habib tells us that with the muslin invasion in India, improved textile technology came to India and muslin production centres sprang up in various parts of this country, sponsored by the Government. Soon Indian muslin outshone the muslin of its homeland and for centuries, muslin meant to the world muslin of India. Muslin Industry flourished between sixteenth and eighteenth century in Bengal.

It may be remembered that muslin – in the sense of superbly fine and beautiful cotton cloth – existed long before the town 'Mosul' in Mesopotamia on the river Tigris produced its muslin.

India is a homeland of cotton. Sanskrit word for cotton is Karpasi. The earliest mention of it is the Aswalayantantra Sutra (about 800 B.C) where it has been distinguished from silk and hemp. Harsa Charit (550 A.D) twice speaks of the cotton from pods of Shalmali tree. The cotton plant was quite unknown to the world outside India. In fact, Greeks first learned definitely of the cotton plant through the group of explorers who visited India along with Alexander the great and his immediate successors in Bactriana. In the periplus of the Erythrean Sea (63 A.D) we have the first commercial mention of Indian cotton. The raw cotton, as also the Indian cotton manufactures were conveyed by the Arab from 'Patiala, Ariake and Barygaza' (the modern Broach) up the Red sea to 'Aduli'. The oldest specimen of the cotton thread was found in the ruins of Mohanjodaro, a city of the Indus valley, deserted about 3000 B.C and the oldest specimen of Indian muslin was found in Egypt as shroud of mummies about 2000 B.C. Muslin is a glory, a beauty and a luxury of the Mughal period in India. It gave birth to so many varieties having Persian names signifying beauty and grandeur.

A piece of muslin brought from India (to England) about the year 1786, proved conclusively that the hand workers of that country could produce yarn and fabric of exquisite fitness. Comparing the yarn with modern standards the yarn number was 250s. The length of one pound of 250s yarn would be approximately 119 miles just to give an idea of its extreme fineness. The house of Jagat Seths of Murshidabad was bankers of the Nawabs. Besides their banking business, they dealt with jewellery, silk and muslin fabrics. During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries muslin reached its highest peak of fame. Fine muslins were produced at Kasimbazar of Murshidabad district of West Bengal. William Hedges, the East India Company agent come to Bengal at the time of Shaestha Khan and from his diary of that time, we can have a vivid picture of Murshidabad and Kashimbazar – as brisk business centres of silk and muslin. Muslin cloth, as all other cloth was the achievement of both the spinners and the weavers. During the seventeenth and eighteenth century, every peasant household possessed a charka to add to the income of the family. The spinners were mostly women and the teen-aged girls. With the decline and fall of the Mughal empire, its glory and beauty faded and the world. During British rule of India, the Indian handloom industry was systematically destroyed by Britishers to promote the machine woven Manchester yarn. The Spinners and weavers of cotton cloth had their thumbs chopped off by the East India Company.

Muslin is a glory, a beauty and a luxury of the Mughal period in India. During the Mughal rule, the weavers received a great deal of encouragement and royal patronage. It gave birth to so many varieties having Persian names signifying beauty and grandeur. There were many grades of muslin, determined by their fineness.

Names of muslin	Characteristics
Malmal	thin plain muslin
Tanjeet	ornament of the body
Abroan	thin transparent texture corresponding to running water
Alaballa	very fine muslin of close texture
Nayansook	thick muslin described as tan-sook in Ain-i-Akbari
BuddenKhas	fine muslin, its wept not so close as that of NayaksOOK
Terindun	clinging to the body
Sarkar-i-ala	manufactured for the use of Nawab's court
Jamdani	flowered muslin
Surbunda	muslin weaved as a turban
Doorea	striped muslin
Sabnam	the evening dew

The finest of all the muslins was the King's Muslin, woven exclusively for the king known as 'mulmulkhas'. This muslin could not be woven for or worn by anyone other than the King. Other fine muslins were fashioned into clothes for the females of the harem which they discarded ritually. The following excerpt from the book Muslin by Sonia Ashmore illustrates how completely the entire muslin industry, its weaving, and ornamentation by embroidery, was in control of the royal court.

"Mulmulkhas, Kings's Muslin, formed part of the annual tribute presented by the rulers and later British Governors of Bengal to the Emperor at Delhi - usually 500 pieces. Mulmulkhas had between 1,800 and 1,900 threads in the warp and a length of 22 yards by one yard. It could take six months to make and, the finest muslins could be made only during the rains when the air was moist enough to prevent the fibres from becoming brittle and breaking. The weavers would mark the completion of a length of this particular muslin: a horn was sounded and the cloth was packed into a special container and paraded through the streets before it was sent on to the Emperor's court at Delhi." It was of the finest quality and much superior to European cloth.

'Abrawan' or running water was the next best quality. This too is so fine that the emperor Aurangzeb chastised his daughter for being immodestly clad! 'shabnam' or evening dew was the third quality, the likes of which we rarely see today. Others down the line are 'circarali' and 'tunzeb'.

The lesser fabrics were 'khassa' or special, 'bafthawa' or woven air 'nyansook' or soothing to the eyes and 'nilambari' or blue skies. Other imaginative names were vapour, mist, nebula, and woven winds. The romantic names conjure images of the finest of fabric, the likes of which none had ever seen.

The revival of Muslin Spinning

Historically, muslin has been recognized as a cotton fabric of legendary lightness, characterized by distinctive motifs. The origins of Bengal cotton go back over a thousand years. Muslin was produced from a cotton plant that grew exclusively along the banks of a certain stretch of the Brahmaputra river. The finished cloth was sought by royalty and traded globally across countries of the Middle East, Europe etc during 16th and 17th century, earning enormous revenue for those involved in its trade. Puritanical Mughal emperor Aurangzeb (17th century AD.) upbraided his daughter for apparently wearing nothing when actually she was wearing seven layers of clothing made of soft, light and sheer muslin. It is a hand-spun hand woven cloth made from delicate high-count yarn. The count is the thickness of the yarn. Higher count makes finer fabric. Between 1717–1727, 1000m muslin of 1000 count would weigh 1 gm only and cost INR 400 when a mid-level courtier lived comfortably on INR 1 per month.

The oppressive British colonists systematically decimated muslin weaving to promote British made cheap mill-made cloth, woven from Indian cotton. The skilled muslin weavers' thumbs were cut off to stop them from weaving. Most of the threatened skilled weavers escaped present Bangladesh and settled in the eastern districts of West Bengal, famous for Bengal cotton products. Muslin weavers began to weave using coarse cotton to hide their identity. Muslin weaving slowly became extinct.

Eventually, the industry was deliberately eroded, and replaced with machine-made fabrics in the 18th century. As a result, the plant, along with the spinners and weavers, receded into the history pages. The best examples of the finished product today are in the custody of Western museums and are thus viewed mostly by Western audiences.

The art of muslin spinning was revived in India with the aid of The Khadi & Village Industries Commission (KVIC). KVIC established two muslin production centres, one at Panduru, Srikakulam district, Andhra Pradesh and the other at Baswa, Birbhum district, West Bengal. But, here, we may mention that muslin in medieval Bengal, in 17th or 18th centuries was spun with the help of traditional Charkhas of taklis. But, at present muslin is being spun with the help of complicated Ambar Charkhas. The new type of Charkhas takes its name after the name of its inventor Shri Ekambarnath.

To distinguish the present muslin from old muslin, it has been named 'Khadi Muslin'. The patronage from the first Prime Minister, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, led Sri. Kalicharan Sharma, a lifelong devotee of Khadi to experimentation on the revival of the lost fame of muslin at Boswa in the District of Birbhum, West Bengal with the assistance of a few spinners. But soon he found the dry climate of Birbhum quite uncongenial for muslin spinning. He then had to shift his working centre at the adjacent district Murshidabad. So, Sharmaji selected Chakslampur for this work. Chakslampur on the river Vairab a branch of the turbulent Padma is a very old village famous for its spinning and weaving from the day of East India Company. It had already achieved fame for weaving silk of high quality after independence. The Chandrakanta Lalitmohan Resam Khadi Samity (CKLMRKS) of that village is one of the leading Khadi institutions of the district Murshidabad. Lalit Mohan Saha, the founder of the CKLMRKS received Shri Sharmaji cordially to give him a scope of experimentation on muslin. In 1955; the Samity started a muslin training centre in the village under Shri Sharmaji's supervision. At first Shri Sharmaji started his experimentation with the traditional Kishan Charkha but it was not possible to spin beyond 250 counts on traditional charkha and was very uneconomical, so he did further experimentation and research and innovated a very sensitive five spindle Ambar Charkha which enabled to spin upto 500 counts and mitigate the production cost and to increase the spinner's wages. Introduction of this Ambar Charkha proved to be effective and promising for the rebirth of muslin. In 1966, to concentrate on muslin spinning, the Samity erected a two-storied separate spacious building at Berhampore.

The centre i.e the muslin training centre of the samity created its glorious history when its young spinners won All India competitions for years in succession. When the first batch of spinners joined All India spinning Competition at Bombay in 1965, their achievements were greeted by all. The leading Bombay dailies headlined that muslin spinning could be done and that it has already been started.

Cotton Fabrics produced by the weavers of Bengal using Hand Spun Yarn spun, popularly known as Muslin, became a legend worldwide for their fine textures and lightness. The featherweight textiles were celebrated in the international market as the "Woven Wind" and the "Wonder Gossamer".

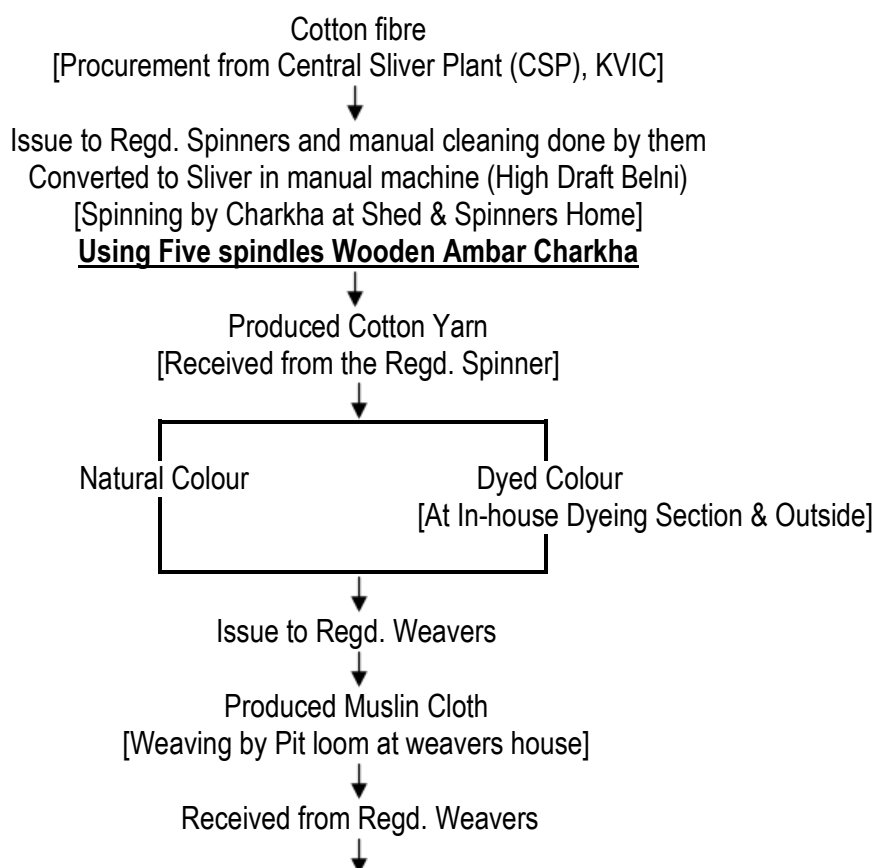

The fabric was very fine and transparent. A five-meter length of Muslin could easily be passed through a finger ring. After partition in 1947, many skilled weavers migrated to India and gradually settled in West Bengal around Shantipur in Nadia and Samudragarh, Dhatrigram and Kalna in Burdwan. These talented weavers soon revive their ancestral occupation and the art of exquisite weaving once again flourished.

I) Method of Production:

Banglar Muslin is a light cotton fabric of plain weave, finely woven and typically white in colour. Making muslin is a very sensitive and lengthy process that takes loads of patience.

The flow diagram of production process for Muslin fabric is given below:

(a) Production Procedure of Banglar Muslin

(i) Type of Cotton

Indian cotton is famous in the market because it produces 4 different species of cotton has better spun quality. Also, India is the only country producing all counts of cotton ranging from 1 s to 81 s and above. Four different species of cotton are cultivated in India; they are Gossypium arboreum, G. herbaceum, G. hirsutum and G. barbadense. The first two are known to be Asiatic cotton because they are grown in Asia and the G. hirsutum cotton is called American or upland cotton, whereas the G. barbadense is called the Egyptian, sea Island, Peruvian, tanguish or quality cotton. 90% of the global production is of the G. hirsutum variety.

The finest sort of muslin was made of phuti cotton, which was grown in certain localities on the banks of the River Brahmaputra and its branches. Thriving only along riverbanks Gossypium arboreum variety neglecta, known locally as phutikarpas (in Bengali), was spun to create threads that maintained tensile strength at counts higher than any other cotton species which produced the unique Muslin cotton. But phutikarpas defied transplanting to other locations, and British colonial policy eliminated it. This particular variety has been extinct for over a hundred years now. Although cultivars may remain, they are unconfirmed.

The world's finest cotton cloth from G. arboreum fibre had been traditionally produced in India for more than 5,000 years. Indian cotton fabric had been the main exports to Britain for about 100 years before the British enforced a ban in 1721 AD act, prohibiting calicoes and cotton import from India because of the collapse of their domestic wool industry.

Among all the cotton species under cultivation, species G. arboreum is blessed with some inherent agronomical, entomological and physiological attributes. Species G. arboreum possesses many favourable traits for cotton production, which the upland cotton cultivars lack. Drought tolerance, resistance to diseases like root rot and insect pests like bollworms and aphids makes G. arboreum well adapt to dry land (rain fed) conditions and low input cultivation practices. Owing to the positive attributes associated with the species G. arboreum, to withstand biotic and abiotic stresses and being inherently hardy, more and more impetus is being laid on bringing improvement in fibre quality of the strains belonging to the species as fibre quality, particularly strength, length, and micronaire (a measure of fibre fineness and maturity), is critical in maximizing price returns to growers and accessing premium markets.

Fine cotton muslin fabrics are being produced from “Suvin” variety of cotton.

MAKING OF YARN

Cleaning of cotton seeds from raw cotton

The lint and seed are separated by hand. The process is extremely time consuming as it involves a tedious manual elimination of cotton seeds.

Belni

After cleaning, the cotton is then ready for separation in a manual operated machine known as 'Belni'. A particular weight of cotton is processed for making yarn of specific count.

TREATMENT OF YARN

- Soaking the yarn in water containing lemon juice. Yarn is kept immersed for for 5-6 days for better fermentation with change of water. Soaking effects bleaching.
- Preparation of Panta bhat: It is rice-based fermentation prepared by soaking rice in water overnight. The rice is smashed by hand and applied to the yarn hank.

STARCHING OF WARP YARNS, AND MAKING OF WARPERS BEAM

Steps involved in application of fermented rice based starch 'Panta bhat' to the muslin cotton yarn hanks

Steps involved in unwinding the starch applied cotton hank to a more structured hank with correction of entanglement of yarn during the process of application if any. Followed with drying activities. The whole process of application usually done in the early morning hours.

Steps involved in unwinding the starched cotton yarn hanks to small spool in a Charkha winder. This will be further used in warping process.

Length is 11 metres (usually two saree length of 5½ metres).

Insertion of warp yarns through reed is known as "Sana gatha" in bengali. A reed is part of a weaving loom, and resembles a comb. Each yarn is drawn through a bamboo comb (sana), equal in breadth to the loom. It is used to separate and space the warp yarns, to guide the shuttle's motion across the loom, and to push the weft threads into place. The reed is securely held by the beater. The warp yarns pass through the dents of the reed after going through the heddles and before becoming woven muslin fabric.

The process involves parallelization of warp yarns and making of the weavers beam. Uniform tension is maintained on individual yarns during warping. The yarns are wound on the warper's beam in the form of a sheet composed of parallel bands of yarn. This process is known as "Naroj gotano" in bengali.

Setting up of all the assembly along with the insertion of the lease rods prior to the weaving operation. The process is known as "Bua Tola". This helps in separation of the warp yarns, forming a shed and aiding the hands in keeping the yarns separated and in order.

J) Uniqueness:

The Banglar Muslin fabric is one of the most popular, finest and purest forms of cotton. Known for its extraordinary quality and purity of the cotton, its luster, and softness gives it precedence over all other cotton products. Muslin breathes well, and is a good choice of material for clothing meant for hot, dry climates.

This finest sort of muslin was made of cotton, which was spun to create threads that maintained tensile strength at counts (above 300 Counts and upto 600 Counts) i.e., higher than any other cotton products.

The following are some of the unique features of Bangla Muslin fabric:

- The cotton lint and seed were separated by hand. Sliver making, doubling and drafting is further carried out in a manual operated machine known as Belni unit.
- The yarns of muslin fabric were produced through a hand spinning process especially in five spindles Wooden Ambar Charkha.
- There is a unique way of starching of warp yarns, and making of warper's beam. The whole process is usually done in the appropriate temperature and humidity during early morning hours.
- The traditional yarn treatment of muslin fabric is done in the following mannner:
  - Soaking the yarn in water containing lemon juice. Yarn is kept immersed for 5-6 days for better fermentation with change of water. Soaking effects bleaching.
  - Preparation of Panta bhat (fermented rice): It is rice-based fermentation prepared by soaking rice in water overnight. The rice is smashed by hand and applied to the yarn hank.
- The count of muslin fabric yarn is mostly between 300<sup>s</sup> - 500<sup>s</sup> metric count in warp/weft.
- The number of yarns in the fabric varies from 112 to 124 per inch depending on the fabric geometry.

A particular weight of cotton is processed for making yarn of specific count and as the metric count increases the fabric weight (gsm) decreases making this variety of muslin the lightest fabrics. The Banglar Muslin is the finest variety of muslin fabrics weighing less than 48 grams per square metre

Human skills involved:

Banglar muslin has acquired an important place for its special characteristic in dyeing, designing and weaving with particular reference to human skill involved in the process of starching of warp yarns, and making of warper's beam and imparting special finish.

Expertise in Dyeing:

Dyers are apt in dyeing cotton, in variety of vegetative colors.

Impact of Environment:

The source of water used during manufacturing of the muslin is vital to its quality. The quality of the muslin with the use of deep tube well to bore well water. The process of starching of warp yarns and making of warper's beam for the Banglar Muslin can only is attained by a special starch made from the combined puffed paddy, lime and water.

The type of paddy grown and the mineral content of water used are vital to the consistency and quality of the starch. The paddy grown and the water used in it is the attributes of the local environment, soil and water of those region. Moisture regains of fibre plays a vital role. As moisture increases, breaking strength of Natural fibre likes cotton, jute, hemp and protein fibre wool and filament silk etc. increases for an optimum range. Basically average humidity of West Bengal is high. So this strength of fibre does not fall during process.

The optimum temperature and humidity is favourable for Banglar Muslin is found between 5 am to 9 am. The whole process of yarning and weaving of the fabric is done between that early morning hours.

Expertise in Weaving:

It is a well-known fact that, among other kinds of cotton fabric, muslin is a versatile fabric. During muslin spinning, the yarns are interwoven in such a way that air circulation passes through the textile fabric. This cotton fabric is very soothing in summer as there is sufficient air ventilation. It has the ability to absorb moisture, soak sweat easily and keep the wearer cool and dry. The subtle texture of muslin is a physical uniqueness of muslin mainly derives from its hand spun and hand woven characteristics. Muslin comes in grey, bleached and in many colours and is not harmful to the skin as synthetic fabrics. It is a very attractive textile material which has been used for many designers' apparel by doing handwork on the garments they made. Based on the features of muslin fabric, there were many attempts in a society in order to promote and popularize muslin among people.

N.B: The distinctive feature of this variety of muslin weaving is its empowerment of women in rural sectors in particular. It has a unique capacity to create employment at the dwelling place of artisans with very low capital requirement. Over the years, kindled hope for the artisan families to rise above deprivation and backwardness, and added that it remained an important vehicle for the development of rural India.

Under the Khadi and Village Industries Commission (KVIC) regulations, women became self-employed without having to disturb their routine chores. Muslin weaving has helped around 39,583 muslin beneficiaries with nearly 70% being women. Banglar Muslin spinning is generally done by skilled girls and women and weaving mostly by skilled men. Khadi is one such organization that makes the fabric and promotes it as well. In India, Khadi refers to hand spun and hand-woven fabric.

This finest fabric of Banglar Muslin is an energy conserving cloth. Production operations are not based on the use / burning of fossil fuels and therefore do not degenerate the environment, especially in this age of global warming.

Among all the above uniqueness, Banglar Muslin is considered to be the representing fabric textile of India due to its various unique features. The Khadi movement by Mahatma Gandhi aimed at boycotting foreign cloth and began promoting the spinning of Khadi for rural self-employment and self-reliance (instead of using cloth manufactured industrially in Britain) in the 1920s in India, thus making Khadi an integral part and an icon of the Swadeshi movement. Khadi was meant to become a supplementary industry to agriculture, a crucial element in a self-sustaining economy. Adopting Banglar muslin as a lifestyle choice symbolizes the move away from British textiles and products - resulting in all those spontaneous bonfires into which people flung their rich silks and laces from England and the promotion of all things Indian.

Facilitating GI would indicate the quality and genuineness of a product with an aim to provide a unique identity to brand 'Banglar Muslin' in domestic as well as international markets and will help to fully realize the growth potential of the Khadi handloom sector.

K) Inspection Body:

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

The history of the lace industry in and around Narsapur in West Godavari district is closely linked to the history of colonial penetration into this area. Narsapur is situated on the bank of the river Vasishta Godavari, 12 miles from the Bay of Bengal has been an ancient port and trading centre on the Coromandel Coast. Even before the Dutch East India Company had opened a factory in Palakol and chose Narsapur as their port in the 17th century, Narsapur had been an important trading point, mainly for the export of excellent textiles produced by the spinners and weavers in the hinterland. Narsapur seems to have reached the zenith of its prosperity in the last quarter of the 17th century, under the English East India Company. The Dutch and the English merchants, opened Europe as the market for hand woven and hand painted cotton goods, from the Coromandel Coast. These Indian textiles were so cheap and popular in Europe in the 17th and the 18th centuries that these imports constituted a threat to the English weavers and manufacturers.

In 1827 the East India Company closed its factory in Narsapur and the Europeans withdrew. The Dutch had already left Narsapur earlier. The origin of the lace industry is connected with the history of the missionaries in the Godavari delta. In 1837, George Beer and William Bowden came to Narsapur where they found Godavari delta mission or the Bretheren Mission. The wife of Rev. J. Cain, the missionary at Dumugudem has started a lace work industry at that station which is known even outside India. Lace –making was originally taught at the Church Missionary society's boarding school for girls; and during the famine 1896-97 Mr. Cains encouraged the young women who had learnt the art in the school to take it up as a means of livelihood. From that time forth, the industry spread around, and there were almost 110 workers, most of them Christians. Mrs. Cain paid them for their work and sold the products in India, England, and Australia. The lace is not the 'pillow lace' made elsewhere in South India, but is 'Darned net lace' which somewhat resembles Limerick lace in appearance.

In 1900 the brothers Jonah and Joseph started exporting lace on regular commercial lines. They wanted to give work to the poor women, but at the same time they changed the production of lace from a non-profit activity aimed at solicitation donations and aid for the poor women into a value producing business. Mrs. Jonah and Joseph organized the production of lace along the classical and putting-out system. The lace industry at Naarsapur seems to have been a fairly stable business since Mrs. Jonah and Joseph started to export lace. Later in 1908, K. Soma Raju, a local of Narsapur started exporting lace regularly on purely commercial lines, which gave a great boost to the growth of lace export in West Godavari district. Around that time, about 2,000 women in Narsapur were engaged in lace works.

The history of the crochet lace industry in these areas runs parallel to the colonial accession of the region during the 18th Century. A belief having ample written proof is that this craft was taught to the local women by Mr. and Mrs. Macrae of Scotland in 1844. The marketing of the lace was organized through friends and well-wishers in India and abroad. Thus, the Victoria Technical Institute of Madras sold lace for Rs. 5,475 in 1927 and the workers earned a sum of Rs. 53,025 in 1928. During the general economic depression in 1932-33 the industry suffered. In 1932, Mrs. Cain distributed Rs. 19,898 as wages among the workers; she paid US $ 460 for material imported from England, Rs. 1,225 as customs duty and 1,018 as postage. She died in 1934. Though she was succeeded by Miss C. Wallen, the Dummiguddem lace industry came shortly afterwards to an end. Then Messrs. Jonah and Josef began to export lace along commercial lines. They immediately re-organized the production process as well. Though the missionaries had already introduced production for money, it was not yet a production of exchange values or a capitalist production process in its true sense. Messrs. Jonah and Joseph organized the production of lace along the classical putting-out system. They employed several agents - mainly women of their confidence - who visited the artisans at certain intervals, gave them the thread and the designs their customers abroad had ordered and, after a certain time, they came to collect the finished articles. They paid the women artisans the wages agreed upon and gave them new thread. The agents or middle women sometimes also did the finishing work - stretching, sorting out, etc. of lace in the house of the exporters. They as well as the artisans were paid piece rates.

During 1970s, Lace making an important cottage industry is carried on extensively in Palacole and Narasapur and its surrounding villages. Crochet laces as they are popularly called are exported to some of the foreign countries like the U.K, the U.S.A, Canada, France and Australia. The annual turnover of this industry is estimated at Rs. 20 Lakhs.

The Indian lace market also saw an expansion after 1970. This does not mean that Indian middle class families had started to use lace on a big scale. The growth of the home market is mainly due to the expansion of the tourist industry. Tourists buy most of the lace in Calcutta, Bombay and New Delhi, mostly from private traders, but also from the Government's Handicrafts Emporia. A lot of lace which finds its way from Narasapur to the big cities is actually also exported from there by certain traders. Thus, we can assume that about 95 per cent of the total lace production is in fact exported, either directly from Narasapur or indirectly from the big Indian marketing centres. Over 80% of the total production of lace products is exported to the major markets of USA, Europe and Japan. The range of products exported from the region include home furnishings and made ups like table covers, table mats and napkins, cushion covers, bed spread, garments and accessories.

I) Method of Production:

The chunk of the production is for export market, hence the production process starts once the order is received from the buyer. The first process is the submission of samples and seeking the approved sample.

The cluster produces the products for both the Domestic as well as for the Export markets. The production pattern for Domestic & Export differs slightly in initial stages, i.e. sourcing of Yarn. The exporter's source the qualitative dyed yarn of specified counts from Tirupur, Karur & Erode, whereas the domestic manufacturers purchase hark yarn, get them dyed locally, prepare cones and then sent the cones for the crochet production, whereas the exporters supply the dyed yarn to the artisans through their agents, by disintegrating the product, into individual design components, so as the confidentiality of the end product remains intact.

Sample Production & Confirmation:-

Samples are produced in the unit by the skilled Labor and the versatile artisans who work within the premises of the supplier / society. Work is carried out in secrecy and decorum; the samples are dispatched for approval along with the certificates of the tests conducted for the color fastness, nature of the dyes used etc. The approved samples are the base for production.

Development of Design Graphs:-

The product is disintegrated into different parts based on design and the different designs are supplied to different artisans in different directions, through the help of design graphs or the product prototypes. These graphs some times are on graph paper and sometimes the photo copies of the design. With the advent of mobile technology the circulation of design on Whatsapp is quite prevalent among the liners organizing the production.

Procurement of Yarn:-

In case of grey or bleached yarn, the need is met locally, through the Raw Material yarn bank of the cluster. However in some cases, the main raw material to be used by the lace manufacturers which is 100% cotton yarn of (2ply 10s count) in off white colour, is sourced from mills in Pali Rajasthan. They use mostly off white colour due to absence of sophisticated dyeing facility at the cluster and high cost of dyed yarn obtained from Madura coats, Vardhaman etc. The price of the yarn varies according to the grade, source and form of the yarn. If the yarn /fabric need quality dyeing, it is send to Erode or Tirupur. In case of specific fast colors, the exporter's source dyed yarn directly from Karur, Erode or Salem. The raw material for the export orders are of high quality both in terms of the yarn and the dyes. The eco-friendly and azo free dyed yarn are sourced for the Handicrafts and high end customized orders.

Dyeing of Yarn:-

For domestic production the dyeing is done at the Weavers Colony of the Narasapur Cluster, whereas for some export product with specified Pantop colors, the dyeing takes place at Chirala. This is one of the major bottlenecks in the cluster and efforts are on for setting up of a Dyeing Unit at the International Lace Trade Centre (ILTC), Rustambada.

Testing (Color matching):-

Before commencing export orders, it is ensured that the dyed yarns are tested for the color matching at the SGS / Inter-teck Laboratories, either at Chennai or at New Delhi, as even the slightest variation could result in variation from the normal shades, effecting the quality norms confirmations of the order.

Winding Yarn to Cones:-

This process is done mainly in the domestic productions, where the dyed hank yarn are wound in cones as the supply of raw material and the crocheting wages are based on the number of cones knitted.

Distribution of Cones (Middleman):-

The linkages of the artisan and the exporter are through a set of agents, who supply the cones to a Liner with a copy of specified design. The liner is basically a Lady Head facilitating the production either at her house or at the common facility centres / common production centers. It may be noted that the crocheting art is practiced mainly by the Kapu Community ladies, in a group, during their leisure time, without affecting the family life.

Monitoring Production:-

The supplier provides the product design pattern / sample to the Master Lace Trainer (MLT) who in turn educates the group of artisans at the common production centres at village level. Under the supervision of the Master Lace Trainer, the artisans develop the crochet lace work as per the desired quality and design with the raw materials provided to them. Although artisans are the key persons, they do only what is explained to them. They are by no means allowed to interfere with the designing aspects. The work is carried out using, mercerized cotton yarn, Lurex, Polyester, Kora Cotton & Dyed yarns.

When a new design is introduced for the first time, the samples of the same are made first and then circulated to everybody involved directly in the production. Artisans expanding their work to sampling are paid little higher. They are open to experimentation but only when they have free time.

The crocheting begins by placing a thread loop on the hook, pulling another loop through the first loop, and so on to create a chain. The chain is either turned and worked in rows or joined end to end to work in rounds. Stitches are made by pulling one or more loops through each loop of the chain.

Mostly singled hooked needles of six inches long made from cycle spoke are used by the artisans with a Thermocol piece (stopper) placed on the top of the needle to provide better control while weaving. Usually it takes a week's time for an individual lace artisan working 5 hours a day to weave ½ cone/bundle of yarn which fetches them roughly Rs.100 – 200.

The liner is responsible for the quality, quantity and the timely supply of the crocheted production allocated to her. She plan and monitor the production, such that the production is returned back to the agent for further processing timely.

Assembling & Quality Check:-

Once the crochet product is made and sent to the supplier/exporter, the finishing steps are done as per the requirements of the buyer. If the crocheted pieces are to be appliquéd on to the fabric the raw edges of the fabric are first finished with an over lock machine and then the appliqué is done. Such processes are mostly used for preparing table mats.

The exporter finishes the product by:-

Blocking: This procedure shapes the crocheted pieces to specific measurements and at the same time usually smoothens the slight stitch irregularities.

Joining: It is the step after blocking for any project which has been made in sections. When the edges are uneven joining is done with a seam allowance as it gives a neater finish and appearance. When the edges are even and have the same number of stitches joining can be done edge to edge.

Edging: It may be applied as a final step to provide extra firmness and to finish the edges for a neater and more uniform appearance.

Attachments: In case of products like Garments, bags, cushion covers, etc, there are zipper and button attachments. These days' artificial pearls, beads, etc are also used as to enhance the beauty.

Quality Check: The designs crocheted are assembled at the exporter's premises for shaping the final product and it is at this point of time that the products are checked for quality aspects namely, Weight, Finishing / Look, Design spread, Out threads, Patchy color shades.

Finishing cum Processing:

The assembled goods are washed and bleached in grey cotton product segments, and then after drying, they are ironed and properly piled for the next process.

Labeling, Tagging & Packing:

The lace products needing proper care & handling are given care labels as issued by the buyer or importer. These labels vary from country to country and are in multiple languages meeting the statutory requirements. After labeling the same are given price tag and are packed as per the buyers instructions.

Third Party Inspection:

This activity is carried out by the buyer nominated agency, like SGS or Intertek to ensure that the entire consignment of goods are as per the buyers specification and the terms of contract especially meeting the statutory, social, ethical and quality compliances applicable at the importing end. This they carry out by visual inspection systems and periodic audits.

J) Uniqueness:

The intricately woven Narsapur lace speaks of a rich history of handicrafts that dates back to 100 years and many generations. The age-old industry of handmade crochet lace-work has been passed down from one generation to the next and is mainly undertaken by the women of the household.

Inherited Art: Art introduced by the Missionaries during 1849 in famine spread from one generation to other. There are some families, where at there are four Generation artisans.

Leisure Art: A leisure art practiced in leisure time with domestic skills by the women folks of forward Kapu community. The production is highly scattered dispersed and operating in a non-industrial mode. The people bonding and the crocheting go side by side together.

Practice: The Lace knitting practice is done in Collective groups. During the collective work, desire to perform well over the others, develops as self-induced competency.

Needle: Crocheting to a beginner start from bending the abundantly available cycle spoke. Later from cycle spoke the other options namely plastic needle, cast iron needle to steel needle with a thermocol piece at the end of the needle.

Gamut of products: Readymade Garments, Home Textiles & Garment Accessories. Bed Spreads to Handicrafts, Toys, Ornamentation Goods like Necklace & integration with numerous products with lace border.

Narasapur Pattern of Stitches –

Textures: A selection of compact patterns that are variations of the basic crochet basic stitches. They are firmer than the basic knit stitches.

Shells: A group of three or more stitches worked together into one chain space. The stitches come close together at the base of the formation and spread out at the top forming a shell like structure. Such structures are worked with fine yarn and are used in a variety of Garments like, Shawls, Skirts, Dresses, etc, due to its curved edges. The shell makes a good edging stitch. It is also used to smooth the yarn and requires more yarn than the simpler stitches.

Clusters: A group of three or more stitches worked into one stitch or chain space drawn together at the top with one loop. All the clusters stand out from the flat surface providing texture and dimension in the finished piece and making it more attractive.

Motives: A common motif is composed of stitches working on a centering. The formation may be symmetrical or asymmetrical, but each unit is complete and can be used individually or joined with other units in a patchwork. The central ring or motif is generally a straight chain closed to form a loop by a slip stitch. The first row around the circle is called a round and is worked into this circle with stitches taken over the chain and adjusted to fit every round. Motifs can be used individually as coasters, table mats, potholders, or can be joined edge to edge to make pouches, bags and tea cozies. The most popular use is Patch work. Such motifs can be formed in succession on a single chain and increased upwards to make panels for garments and also be used in making curtains & bed sheets etc.

Meshes: A mesh consists of chain stitches and double crochets, combined in such a way that they form open spaces. A mesh has a wide variety of uses. When used alone a mesh is ideal for being used as a shawl or a stole. These are also suitable for being used as summer garments, even wear, and baby clothing. Meshes also find a lot use in home furnishings.

Designs:

The designs are mainly traditional designs namely based on local flora & fauna namely the Raayaku, Chakram, Jeedi Baddha, Onti – Otthu-Lay-su, Buu-ra Chettu-lu, Chitti lace, Onti –Votthu—La-Lay-su, Rendu- Votthu-La-Lay-su, Sampengi etc. One such stitch cum design is “Vadla Ginja Kuttu”, i.e. Paddy Grain Stitch. West Godavari, land of Annapoorna is the rice bowl of Andhra Pradesh and Paddy is a major crop. Paddy grain in local language is termed as “Vadla Ginja”, and one stitch is named as Vadla Ginja Kuttu. The Narasapur Crochet designs have a depth in their patterns.

Intrinsic Aspect: Narasapur cluster designs are very intrinsic compared to the other cluster designs. The artisans are highly skilled and can crochet even the most complicated intrinsic design subject to Market Realizations.

Adaptability: The artisans are highly flexible in adoption to the changes of products and the designs from Traditional to Geometric to export oriented customized designs and finally any product.

Niche: Their skill to crochet even religious material like holy cross and related products has given a Niche edge to these products in the national as well as international markets.

Look, Feel and Compactness (Qualitative attributes): The Look, feel & Compactness makes the Narasapur crochet lace distinct piece from others. This is one of the important uniqueness and these looks & feel keep changing with the change in count of the yarn. The Uniform dispersion of the yarn in the design generates fineness, look & appeal.

Export Compliances: Compliance of statutory norms & Niche segmentation by the exporters by using Quality yarn & Azo Free dye stuff especially for the export goods.

Raw Material: Fineness of product by virtue of the use of fine count quality cotton yarns of 2/8s, 2/10s, 4/20s cotton yarns used. Other cluster crocheted hand lace products are four times thicker than the Narasapur ones.

Skill:

- Maintaining uniform tension of yarn while crocheting is the core secret for getting uniform and fine products, and also the compactness, whereas in other clusters the stitch is loose.
- The skill to weave the traditional, geometric, modern customized products is the real skill of the artisans that differentiate Narasapur from others centres Lace crochet products.
- The ability to crochet the grey as well as the dyed products with high level of perfectness.
- The speed of production (crocheting) of Narasapur artisans is very high compared to other cluster artisans.

Cultural Ethos: For crochet making community, lace making is a part of their culture inherited from mother to daughter, to daughter in law. Example: if a lady is free she shares the work without any terms and expectations. The past efforts of expansion to other geographic territories failed proving that there are the inherited skills of the locals.

Movement of Needle: In Narasapur cluster the needle movement is from the top.

Distinction of Front and Back: The crocheting is such that the front and back of the product is clearly distinct; front is smooth, whereas back is bit rough.

Measurement: Work measurement is not by tape, but virtue of the stitches, whereas in other clusters, it is measured by tape in cms.

Product Weight / GSM: Narasapur products for the intrinsic design, compactness weigh more than others (High Grams per Square Meter). In other words for the intrinsic designs the number of stitches in a square centimeter, would be the highest at Narasapur when compared to any crochet of any other cluster.

Rogan Art of painting is an ancient skill with its origins in Persia, came down to Kutch around 400 years ago. Traditionally, the craft was pursued to flower motifs and designs speak of a Persian influence and the word Rogan itself means oil-based in Persian, beautify bridal clothing of the regional tribes, beautiful borders and floral patterns on Ghagras, odhni and bead spreads were painstakingly painted. However, it being a dying craft with more people showing interest in it in the form of wall pieces, 'Rogan kaam' has gained popularity as Rogan art in today's time.

When castor oil is heated over fire for more than twelve hours and cast into cold water, it produces a thick residue called Rogan, which is mixed with natural colours obtained from the earth. With a six-inch wooden stick or pen, the craft person then draws out from this a fine thread which is painted to the cloth. Rogan painting is delicately and precisely painted from one's own creative imagination and is done with total concentration sitting on the floor without using a table-frame or any outline. Rogan painted cloth is used for making pillow covers, tablecloths, wall hangings, file folders, decorative pieces and even saris. Traditionally, it was found in the different types of products using rogan technique were Gharara, Odhana, Chaddar, Bed sheet, Quilts and Wall hangings. In ancient time, the demand of Rogan article was much more in comparison to embroidery and Bandhani. During earlier days, rogan painted fabric was worn by local women throughout the year. Presently, rogan artisans make cushion covers, odhana, wall pieces, silk sari, bed cover, table cloth, suit pieces, stole, wallets etc. Current "Tree of Life" of Rogan painting is one the most selling product. Tree of life symbolism has a long history, crossing many cultures, i.e., Christianity, Islamic, Hinduism, Jewish and many more. Each religion has different interpretation of "Tree of Life". While it would be overwhelming to explain its significance to each culture, the tree of life has overarching themes and meanings that span across many peoples.

Perhaps humanity's most enduring symbol of divinity, the Tree of Life is a metaphor that inspires many interpretations by history's most dominant religions and connects us, even today, to each other and the ages.

F) Description:

The most exquisite thing about this painting is the technique in which during the entire process of the gummy paint being carefully twisted into motifs, the blunt needle never comes into contact with the cloth.

The tools and equipment used for the art of Rogan Painting was traditionally handmade or they sourced from the local market or from Bhuj. The tools and equipment's like Dandi (stirrer). Handio (aluminum container) traditionally containers were made from clay. Suya (iron rod), Dhakni (covering plate made up of mud). Parrat (wide mounted iron vessel). Chulah or Bhatti (furnance). Kanno (plastic bowl used for keeping rogan colour paste) and Kharal (manual stone grinder were used. During the olden days, they use only mud container for boiling oil but now-a-days, they have switched over to aluminum containers.

First, the castor oil is heated in the vessel and continuously stirred for more than 12 hours till it catches fire. But the paint maker takes care that it doesn't get burnt. After that, it is mixed with cold water until it thickens into a sticky elastic paste called Rogan. The thick paste is later mixed with natural colors and then immersed in water before storing it in earthen pots. By doing this, the paint retains its malleable texture.

During the ancient times only indigenous colours were used mainly stone were the sources. Rogan painting on cloth gives the embroidery effect. The effect is generated due to the surface application of past which has an embossed and shiny look akin to embroidery

Kutch District forms part of the Saurashtra Region of Gujarat State having an area of 45652 Sq Kms. the Largest in India. It is situated in the South western corner of the Gujarat between 22.44° and 24.41° North Latitude and 78.89° and 71.45° East Longitude.

Rogan art is being practiced by the artisans in Bhuj, Anjar, Rapar and Nakhahana Talukas of Kutch district.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

India is country having a diverse culture, which is still deeply rooted in its history and traditional. It has a wide range of traditional textiles and craftsmanship which provide artistic and exotic range of products. Indian craftsman has age old heritage of nearly about 5000 years old especially woven, resist, painted and printed textiles. Throughout the history of art painting has been the most common means of expression it possesses an inherent aesthetic appeal that surpasses those of other visual art.

Rogan Painting is one of the such traditional textiles craft of Kutch in Gujarat. It is a conventional art of hand painting influenced by Persian art. The word rogan literally mean oil based Painting in Persia. This art was originated in Iran and was brought to India about 200 years ago though there is no historical evidence or records to support this statement, Rogan craft was not confined only to the Punjab frontier, but was also being practiced by Hindus at Kutch in Gujarat. It is a seasonal art used to decorate the garment of bridal trousseau like Ghagra, Odhani, Dupatta, Stole, Shirt, Kurti, Kurta, Ladies Dress Material, Saree, and house hold products like Bed Sheet, Pillow cases, Quilts, table cloth etc. During the ancient times only indigenous colours were used mainly stone were the sources. Rogan painting on cloth gives the embroidery effect. The effect is generated due to the surface application of paste which has an embossed and shiny look akin to embroidery.

The art of rogan painting on cloth dates back to centuries. The Hindu and Muslim communities of Bhuj have been practicing the art of rogan painting from generations. Khatri communities of the one claimed that he was the 8th generation in his family carrying out this craft in Nirona. The Muslim respondents conversed in Kutchhi language while Hindus in Gujarati and they lived in their owned house. The children in the family were not motivated by the parents to study further with the fear that they would take up other job rather than being involved in the existing craft. However, it was compulsory for their children to learn this craft. The craft of rogan painting served as a major source of income for all the craftsmen. The women of the household also earned meager amount of money by carrying out the other craft like bandhni and embroidery.

I) Method of Production:

Rogan painting is one such traditional textile craft of Kutch in Gujarat. It is a conventional art of hand painting influenced by Persian art. The word Rogan itself means oil-based in Persian. Rogan painting is delicately and precisely painted from one's own creative imagination and is done with total concentration sitting on the floor without using a table-frame or any outline. Rogan painted cloth is used for making pillow covers, tablecloths, wall hangings, file folders, decorative pieces and even sarees.

The production process are summarised as below.

Raw material:

Oil used for making Rogan paste: Earlier, wild safflower or poli seeds were crushed to extract the oil and boiled for 12 hours after which they were put in water. As a result of this, it became a gelatinous substance called rogan. In the Kutch region of Gujarat, castor seeds or khardi seeds were used for the oil-extraction and that this process was difficult. Presently due to high level of skills and dexterity, craftsmen used to procure castor oil directly from market (Ahmadabad) as it is readily available.

Colours: Earlier, Craftsmen used Natural dyes. Colour was extracted from natural sources like flower, plant, soil, rocks. But with the passage of time and availability of colour, craftsmen now also buy a readymade pigment colour which are cheaper and make the Rogan making process simple and faster.

Fabric Used: During early days Rogan was limited to thick cotton fabric called khaddar but now due to customer demand and availability of various fabrics, craftsmen began to paint on cotton, silk, wool, polyester and denim. They experiment on new fabrics as well as new surfaces.

Equipments: The equipment's or tools needed for Rogan Art are:

Chula: Earlier, they used to dig the place to lit fire for preparing Rogan gel in forest area. But now days, they are using iron chullas which are available in market. By this, they are trying to compensate the time of digging and making chulla in field.

Vessel (Hundio): Going through the history, to make bold and big motifs and design, large quantity of resin was made in big earthen pot vessels. Since the process of making resin is quite dangerous as temperature used is above 2000C, sometime it leads to accident where earthen pot at such temperature burst and the whole process of making resin was repeated. Due to this reason and availability of other metal vessel now the craftsperson has shifted to use Aluminum vessel; at least, it does not burst out of high temperature.

Stylus: The main equipment used for painting is the Kalam, an iron stylus. It measure about 6 inches to 7 inches in length and had a pointed working end. It was found that design created on fabric were bold and big. It indicates that stylus used was big and having a thick tip to apply the colour on fabric for making large motifs, designs and patterns. But now the pattern has completely changed. To get fine and intricate design, small and pointed tip stylus has been used.

Storage Bowl: Once the Rogan gel is formed, rogan gel has to be stored in container filled with water to avoid air exposure so as to prevent from drying. On comparing the previous method of storage where big earthen pots were used due to large quantity of Rogan gel. Now due to small intricate design, small amount of resin was prepared and is stored in small plastic bowl containing water which is quite easy to store and consume less space.

Frame: It is used to pin the cloth.

Scissors: It is used to cut the cloth to required size.

Pins: These are used to fix the fabric to the frame.

Process: The Process of Rogan painting is divided into two parts: Preparation of Rogan Paste and Painting process on Fabric.

Preparation of Rogan Paste: For the preparation of colour paste, the main equipment used was kharal, the manual stone grinder which helped in mixing the colour paste. The ingredients were naphthol dyes, white chalk powder and water used for colour paste. In both the places, the naphthol dyes were used which was purchased from Ahmedabad or Bhuj. Prior to the preparation of the fresh paste the manual grinding stone was cleaned thoroughly such that there would be no residual traces of former paste. This was done in order to avoid the slightest stain of previous colour into the fresh paste. After cleaning the kharal the process of grinding the dye begins and by addition of gradually water to it as required. The grinding process continues till a smooth paste is prepared. A small quantum of gelatinous rogan paste was taken, and added to the dye paste. The process of grinding the dye paste continues till the rogan is thoroughly mixed with the dye paste such that a soft, smooth gelatinous paste was made. The process of making Rogan paste was very time consuming and hazardous to health as stated by the craftsmen of Nirona. For preparing the rogan paste, the craftsmen needed to be highly skilled. Oil is boiled in earthen pot for 12 hr. on boiling, oil emits a strong odor, and hence heating process is being done outside village area. Matka is filled with castor oil to about half its capacity and processed at high temperature i.e. 2000C. Viscosity of the paste is then checked with a wooden stick (at regular intervals till the required viscosity is achieved. This paste can be stored safely for about one and a half months to two months, after which it dries up. The next stage was adding colour to prepare a rogan paste. The proportion of pigment colour and rogan is approximately 2:1. Little amount of lime (filler) was added to make the smooth paste. The ready colours paste was kept in bowl containing water. Water prevents it from getting dried. This method of mixing Rogan gel with pigment is still followed by the artisan.

Process of the Rogan Painting: A number of ingredients were used during the entire process of rogan painting and these ingredients were castor oil, wood, kerosene oil, and dyes.

The method used traditionally for the preparation of rogan was a tedious process. Rogan took a long time at each successive step in order to have a desirable result. The process was handled by only skilled persons and carried out at a distant place away from the residential area, as it emits bad odour and affects the lungs. The preparation process of rogan paste include, the craftsmen located suitable place where they could properly dig the mother earth for the preparation of chulah (furnace) which was the first step of this process, after digging the mother earth they gave a proper shape to Chulah by keeping the chipiyas on it at the three sides. This was boiled for minimum 4 hrs depending upon the quantity of castor oil; the craftsmen stated that the chulah was light by only women of the family; when the burning process starts the craftsmen simultaneously clears the surrounding area for proper placement of heated handio to reduce the inside heat; the boiling process starts after about fifteen minutes and the craftsmen properly monitor the temperature by continuously stirring the castor oil inside the handio. The stirring process was continued; after some time the temperature of the oil increased thus, to lower down the temperature it was removed from the chulah and kept on a side for a while, in case the temperature in aluminium vessel increased more than required the excessive heat resulted into flame inside the container.

Thus, the temperature was regulated to avoid these flames; the boiling process emits bad odor which affect the lungs of craftsmen at long run as stated by the respondents. During boiling process the castor oil starts catching fire, once the oil catches flame then immediately the handio (oil container) was removed from the chulah and was covered with dhakani. When oil container was uncovered the oil comes in contact with the oxygen due to which it catches fire; during the same time the castor oil gets purified since through boiling process existing impurities were thrown out in form of fumes. There after the oil container was again covered with dhakani to put off the flame. This entire process was repeated number of times until the castor oil transformed in a thick paste like gelatinous substance; after required boiling, white particles were visible during the process on the surface of the oil which gradually begins to change into yellowish colour. At that stage the colour of castor oil turns to yellow colour. And the craftsman checks the consistency with the help of wooden rod; then it was removed from the chulah and kept aside; and after this entire process, the rogan paste was kept for 5-6 hrs in the shade for proper cooling to form the gelatinous thick paste. The entire process of preparing rogan paste. The carries out their work for rogan painting. The only difference was that instead of last process a water bath was prepared and castor oil was mixed and immediately the thick gelatinous paste of rogan was prepared.

Process of preparing of colour paste: Each and every stage of the process was as informed by the craftsmen. The process of rogan painting was very time consuming art and hazardous to health as stated by the craftsmen of Nirona. They stated that for preparing rogan paste the craftsmen needed to be highly skilled. For the preparation of colour paste, the main equipment used was kharal, the manual stone grinder which helped in mixing the colour paste.

The ingredients were naphthol dyes, white chalk powder and water used for colour paste. In both the places, the naphthol dyes were used which was purchased from Ahmedabad or Bhuj. Prior to the preparation of the fresh paste the manual grinding stone was cleaned thoroughly such that there would be no residual traces of former paste. This was done in order to avoid the slightest stain of previous colour into the fresh paste. After cleaning the kharal the process of grinding the dye begins and by addition of gradually water to it as required. The grinding process continues till a smooth paste is prepared. A small quantum of gelatinous rogan paste was taken, and added to the dye paste. The process of grinding the dye paste continues till the rogan is thoroughly mixed with the dye paste such that a soft, smooth gelatinous paste was made.

Making design on the fabric: The artisans are still following the same way of achieving the working viscosity where they take a lump of the colored rogan in the palm of his left hand. He holds the kalam in his right hand. Craftsman's left palm is used for warming, softening and mixing the rogan gel. He then draws out fine threads from the prepared gel, by means of a stylus or a kalam. When rogan is in a perfectly workable state and can be drawn out into threads of the required thickness, the thread adhering to the cloth and drawn finer and finer to form the design.

Process of Rogan painting on the fabric: The painting process was very tedious and time consuming craft. The process of rogan painting as stated by the craftsmen is as follows.

Initially the fabric to be painted was spread on the floor/ground; then the craftsmen take a lump of colour paste and puts on his palm and mixes vigorously with a suya rod held by other hand. The process of mixing continuous till the rogan coloured paste was stretched to a thread like structure, this paste was then used to paint the fabric with the help of suya, the fines of painting based on the stretch ability of the coloured rogan paste, the fabric to be painted was folded exactly from the centre. The painting was done only on one side of the folded portion of the fabric. This was then again folded from the center pressed evenly to get an identical impression on the other half portion. After that the fabric is opened to check for getting the mirror image of the design as a whole pattern which is kept to dry under the sunlight for about 6-7 hrs.

Motifs: Traditionally, the floral, geometrical and calligraphy motifs were used for the art of rogan painting. The calligraphy motifs were not used by the craftsmen since they did not have any traditional calligraphy motifs. During the ancient period, the calligraphy motifs were used in Persian alphabets. The bird's motifs were used only by the Hindu & khatri craftsmen of Kutch. These motifs were used as all over pattern i.e. covered the whole area. Mainly two layouts were used for motif placement i.e. border and all over. The motifs painted by Hindu & khatri craftsmen were large with broad outline. They also incorporated bigger motifs of bird which were not seen in rogan painted product of Kutch.

J) Uniqueness:

Preparation and Use of thick paste of Castor oil and different colour:

- In the Kutch region of Gujarat, castor seeds or khardi seeds were used for the difficult process of oil-extraction. Earlier, Craftsmen used Natural dyes. Colours are extracted from natural sources like flower, plant, soil, rocks. But with the passage of time and availability of colour, craftsmen now buy readymade pigment colours, which makes Rogan making process simpler and faster. All kind of fabric they experiences Rogan craft. The proportion of pigment colour and Rogan is approximately in the ratio 2:1. To make smooth paste little amount of lime (filler) added. Artisans use equipments like chula, vessel, stylus, storage bowl, frame, scissors, pins. The paste is then used to paint the fabric with the help of suya, the fineness of painting based on the stretch ability of the coloured Rogan paste. the design as a whole pattern which is kept to dry under the sunlight for about 6-7 hrs.
- The elements utilized in Rogan art are earthy, hence they are environmentally friendly.
- Kutch Rogan Craft is a traditional craft, utilized to ornament various traditional attire components.

Pattern, Designs, and Motifs:

- A unique feature of this craft is that once the outline of the design is painted over the fabric, it can be folded or pressed against another fabric or the fold of the same fabric to get the second impression of the same design. The "tree of life" design is one of the burning example of it.

Tree of Life Concept

- The use of "Tree of life concept" in Kutch Rogan Craft. The contemporary design of Rogan painting, "Tree of Life" can be seen in different folk paintings in different styles sharing same symbolism and meaning. Tree of life symbolism has a long history, crossing many cultures, i.e., Christianity, Islamic, Hinduism, Jewish and many more. Each religion has different interpretation of “Tree of Life”. While it would be overwhelming to explain its significance to each culture, the tree of life has overarching themes and meanings that span across many peoples. Perhaps humanity's most enduring symbol of divinity, ‘the Tree of Life’ is a metaphor that inspires many interpretations by history's most dominant religions and connects us, even today, to each other and the ages.

- The motifs and patterns used in Rogan paintings contain both traditional and contemporary designs. Curvilinear patterns repeated geometrically. The linear forms and symmetry is created by the double impression done by folding and peeling cloth, which leaves a mirror image. Phool (flower), Trikhani (three dots), Vesur (wavy border motif) and Jhad (trees) are the oldest found motifs. Animals, trees, humans and objects like bangles also make artistic appearances in the designs. The contemporary motifs include circular/ concentric patterns, motifs forming architectural elements like the Jalis/screens and the tree-of-life motifs.

Unique Human Skill of the Artisans:

- The Kutch Rogan Craft makes by free hand of the artisans. The artisans are still following the same way of achieving working viscosity by taking a lump of coloured Rogan in the palm of his left hand and holiday wooden kalam in his right hand to prepare the art.
- Craftsman's left palm is used for warming, softening and mixing the Rogan gel. He then draws out fine threads from the prepared gel, by means of a stylus or a kalam by right arms. The design is skillfully worked out using stylus on one half of the cloth, which is then folded very carefully on a central line, and pressed slightly with the palm thus effectively stamping the design on remaining half of the cloth. This process is one of the best human skills possess by the artisans of Rogan craft

- C) Name of the Geographical Indication :

CUTTACK RUPA TARAKASI (SILVER FILIGREE)

- D) Types of Goods : Class 14 – Silver Filigree

- E) Specification:

The Cuttack Rupa Tarakasi also known as Silver Filigree of Cuttack is so iconic to the city that the name Silver City for Cuttack was derived from the prominence of Silver Filigree. In Odia Language, Tara means wire and Kasi means to design. Silver bricks are transformed into thin fine wires or foils and used to create jewelry or showpieces out of it. Filigree has been traditionally associated with fine craftsmanship and luxurious design in classical jewelry.

The origin of Silver Filigree in Cuttack is ambiguous but it has been proven that as far back as the 12th century, craftsmen working with silver existed. Silver Filigree received considerable patronage under the Mughals, thus strongly linking it to them as source of origin. Over the years, as Cuttack transitioned through the hands of different rulers, Silver Filigree took on a new form with each.

The Silver Filigree of Cuttack is now known for its very intricate design and fine craftsmanship which is not seen in other clusters across the country or the world. Further, the 3-dimensional nature of the products made in Cuttack give it a realistic finish and make it unique to the cluster. The specific products that are made only in Odisha are Durga Puja Medhas for the Durga Puja pandals in Cuttack, Dama Chains, Odissi Jewelry and religious/cultural pieces linked directly to the customs of Odisha. The quality parameters in the cluster are i) the percentage mix of the Silver alloy used in the cluster and ii) the fine craftsmanship that is done by hand with only select manpower enhancing machines.

F) Description:

Silver Filigree, as the name suggests is Filigree work done with silver. The Oxford Dictionary definition of the word filigree is delicate decoration done from gold or silver wire. The word filigree was also spelt as filigrann or filigrene. Etymologically, filigree is derived from the Latin word filum meaning thread and granum meaning grain.

The etymology of the word filigree throws light on the delicacy and intricacy of the craft. Taking this ahead, silver filigree of Cuttack is known to be one of the finest of the clusters in the world. As stated in the book, The Silversmith's handbook, first published in 1877, "The principal localities where this description of work is produced in the highest perfection are Delhi, Cuttack, and Trichinopoly, in India; and Genoa, Paris, Florence, Malta, Norway, and Sweden. The Indian filigree work is the finest and cheapest in the world. The Maltese manufacture a very good kind, and their crosses are much admired; so also do the Chinese and Japanese, but the manufactures of these latter countries are not so tasteful as those of India, consequently they have not been so highly appreciated. Norway and Sweden produce filigree work of a very light weight; but still their productions in this art will not compare in regard to effect with the finest specimens from India."

The popular product categories now found in Cuttack are jewelry, decorative artifacts, accessories, home décor and religious/cultural pieces. The iconic items found only in Cuttack are the Durga Puja Medha, Odissi Jewelry, religious/cultural pieces linked directly to the customs of Odisha and Dama chain.

The production of Cuttack Rupa Tarakasi is restricted to the district of Cuttack and adjacent villages in and around Cuttack district of Odisha State.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Utkal, the other name of Orissa connotes an excellence that has been attained in the sphere of arts and other artisan pursuits. It has been the seat of sculpture, fine art and architecture for centuries. Cuttack city which is located on a spit of land between the Kathajodi and the Mahanadi Rivers was established as a military cantonment by King Nirupa Keshari in 989 CE. During the Ganga Period (13th century CE), it became the capital city and continued to be so till India's independence. After the death of Raja Mukund Dev, the last Hindu king of Odisha, Cuttack was brought under Muslim rule in 16th Century CE and later under the Mughals, Cuttack flourished as the seat of Odisha Subah. In 1750 CE, Cuttack came under the Maratha rule and grew as a vibrant business centre on the east coast of India. Its prosperity continued during the colonial era and Cuttack emerged as both a culturally and an economically prolific city.

The history of Silver Filigree craft runs hand in hand with the history of the artisans who make the craft and the history of the city of Cuttack. The origin story of silver filigree is ambiguous with multiple theories leading up to the arrival of the craft in Cuttack. There is influence from the Persians, Indonesians, Mughals and even further away by the Greeks. As there is no one proven record of how the craft came to be in India or the state of Odisha, all of the possible influences have been mentioned here.

History of Craft and Artisans

History records that, "The silver filigrain work in which the people of Cuttack in Orissa have attained such surprising skill and delicacy, is identical in character with that of Arabia, Malta, Genoa, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, and with the filigrain work of ancient Greece, Byzantium, and Etruria, and was probably carried into the West by the Phoenicians and Arabs, and into Scandinavia by the Normans, and in the course also of the medieval trade between Turkestan and Russia. In Cuttack the work is generally done by boys, whose sensitive fingers, and keener sight enable them to put the fine silver threads together with the necessary rapidity and accuracy. It is quite distinct in character from the indigenous silver jewelry of the country."

Expanding on the ambiguity of the history of the craft, very little information or recorded history, was available on the nature and structure of filigree production in the Pre-Mughal period. "Archaeological evidences suggest that filigree was incorporated into jewellery as early as 3500 BCE in Mesopotamia where it is practiced even today as Telkari work. According to historians, there is every possibility that the Tarakasi work reached Cuttack from Persia through Indonesia some 500 years ago by sea trade. The argument is based on similar workmanship seen in both Cuttack and Indonesia."

The above excerpt from Craft artisans from urban informal sector, India is further strengthened by another record stated in report of G.C. Kar. It reads, Orissa however holds its distinct position of glamour in intricate design and superb craftsmanship in silver filigree. More than a hundred families in Orissa are engaged in this craft. The report states, "It is believed by some that the craft was probably learnt from the Chinese when the Filigree objects brought by Oriya sea-faring merchants (Sadhabas) from China and Far East. That Filigree did not originate in Orissa is evident from the fact that no temple architecture in the state depicts lacy work."

History of Cuttack

To better understand how it may have arrived in Cuttack, it is important to understand the history of Cuttack along with that of the craft. In the words of Dr. M. A Haque, "Orissa more famous in the name of Kalinga and Utkal in ancient and medieval times is acknowledged as one of the prominent regions in the Indian subcontinent with a distinct political and cultural heritage." It was in the saga of Orissan history that more than one thousand-year-old illustrious city of Cuttack has occupied an important place for numerous events revolving around it through the ages.

It is suggested that the Ganga Dynasty established its supremacy over Orissa before 1108 AD. A historical evidence corroborating this timeline can be read in the work by Syed Aulad Haider Fouque Bilgrami called Tarikh-i-Jadid-i-Subah-i-Orissa. It records that, "Cuttack is the capital of Orissa for last one thousand years." He further states that Raja Nrupa Keshari or Raja Nirupa Keshari (of the Somavamsi dynasty) founded Cuttack in 950 AD or 989 AD.

The last king of the Somavamsi dynasty was defeated by the Ganga king Chodaganga. This is clearly stated in the Temburu grant of Chodaganga, dated saka 1051. The earliest Telugu and Sanskrit inscriptions of Chodaganga in the Narsimha temple in the Jagannath Temple premises at Puri are dated 1108 AD and 1113 AD. It was during his reign that the Jagannath Temple in Puri was built.

Earlier in his reign, Anantavarman Chodaganga had his capital in Kalinganagar, modern Mukhalingam in Srikakulam district of Andhra Pradesh. With the expansion of the kingdom towards the North, he shifted the capital to the central place in Orissa. The Mandala Panji, the palm leaf chronicle of Jagannath temple mentions that Chodaganga occupied Kataka in the guise of a dancer and became the ruler. The importance of Varanasi Kataka, i.e., modern Cuttack in 1113 AD is proved by one of the inscriptions of Simhachalam temple.

It was during the reign of Anangabhimadeva III in the early 13th century that we see Cuttack rise to its true power position. The Nagari plates of Anangabhimadeva III, which records several donations in 1230-31 AD from Abhinava Varanasi, Abhinava Varanasi Kataka and Varanasi Kataka, clearly prove the importance of Cuttack as the capital of the Ganga Empire. Anangabhimadeva granted land in Purunagrama and Jayanagargrama in Sailo Vishaya which is now located in Cuttack district. The Nagari Plates, which records the grant, throw interesting light on the village life of the time with various people such as perfumers, dealers, in conch shell, wood-cutters, goldsmiths, bronzers, dealers in sugar, milkmen, weavers, potters, fishermen, barbers, craftsmen, etc.

As per the Jagannath temple record of rights we know the term Goldsmiths stood for craftsmen that worked with both Silver and Gold and helped in tending of the products. Expanding on the above, in the article Silver Filigree in the Silver City of Cuttack it states, for their traditional and hereditary calling they are locally called 'rupa banias' or 'roupyakars.'

Mukund Dev was the last independent Hindu ruler of Orissa, who occupied the fort of Varanasi Katak until 1568 AD. Abu Fazal, Minister and advisor to Mughal emperor Akbar wrote in the Ain-i-Akbari records that, "Katak, the city has a stone fort situated at the bifurcation of two rivers, the Mahanadi held in high veneration by the Hindus and the Kathjuri. It is the residence of the Governor and contains some fine buildings..." The statement of Ain-i-Akbari convincingly indicates that Cuttack was a flourishing capital city during the time of Mukund Dev.

Orissa was annexed by Akbar's empire in 1590 AD and Raja Mansingh who finally subdued Orissa in 1592 AD made settlement of the province with the help of Raja Todarmal, the great minister of Akbar. It was during the Mughal Era, that the craft received royal patronage and today, Cuttack tarakasi is world renowned for its delicate artistry and excellent craftsmanship. As stated in the Report of G.C. Kar "It is further believed that it is probably at the initiation and patronage of Mansingh that some people of a particular locality learned and practiced the craft. This belief is strengthened by the fact that a locality in Cuttack known as Mansinghpatna even today has a very large number of families which are/were engaged in Silver Filigree"

It can be seen from an excerpt from Glimpses of Orissan Culture, that the craft of Silver Filigree had made a name for itself under Mughal patronage. It reads, "Ralph Caartwright, William Bruton and four other Englishmen went to Cuttack to meet the Mughal Governor on 9 May 1633 and received permission for trading and building of factories and ships. Thus the English endeavour to have direct commercial enterprise in Orissan coast was successful. Hariharpur was the first factory that English established. Situated at the mouth of river Patua, it was a populous place and three thousand weavers were present. Different varieties of cloth were produced in Hariharpur. The cotton stuff like khasa and sahan were being exported from there. Cuttack had become a populous city having big markets. A mint was set up in Cuttack, from where gold, silver and copper coins were produced. Its Silver Filigree work was in great demand."

Further as stated in Crafts and Commerce, "Participation in trade in the seventeenth century was not considered derogatory even among non-trading castes. This is clear from the fact that some

Zamindars of Orissa were also traders. They possessed ships. Among other Hindu traders, 'Macunda' at Pipli, Khemchand, Chintaman and Narayan Das of Balasore were noteworthy. They were rich traders of Orissa, prosecuting vigorous trade in the seventeenth century. Khemchand was a great Banian merchant and chief broker to the English Company. Cuttack and Balasore were the two principal seats of trade and traffic in the eleventh century. Bowrey noted that 'Banian Merchants' lived in these places. They were the richest merchants in the localities."

The history about Maratha Rule in Cuttack has been very well elucidated in the Book Cuttack One thousand Years, and it states "By 1751 the Marhatta rule commenced with Cuttack as its capital. They ruled till 1803, when the British established their rule in Orissa with Cuttack as its capital. During the Marhatta rule, Cuttack and Orissa flourished in trade and business and in establishing cultural bonds with the neighboring kings and in developing fine arts and culture. Though chronicles have not published the various achievements of the Marhattas, during their rule, international trade between Orissa and the Far East was encouraged with Cuttack as the headquarters. The Baliatra actually flourished during their regime."

Bali Jatra, which literally translates to 'travel to Bali', is about the long-standing maritime trade of Orissa. It is believed that Kalinga, another name for Odisha, was dotted with a number of ports and harbors. The Kalingans dominated the sea route and developed close contacts with South East Asian countries, especially Indonesia. It is said that the Kalingans possessed a distinct personality of their own. They were known for their daring ventures and dynamic spirit. The new Encyclopedia Britannica (Micropedia) Vol 8. Describes: "Kalinga was a thriving kingdom at the time of Buddha, in the 3rd Century BC. It was the scene of a great war involving the renowned Ashok. Kalinga became a maritime power in the early centuries of the modern era, enjoying a golden age under the Ganga dynasty, which lasted from 1078 to 1264."

There are anecdotes and evidences to assume that coastal Orissa had rich trade communications with Burma, Indonesia, and Thailand. The great poet Kalidasa has described the kingdom of Kalinga as 'Mahodadhipati' or ruler of the seas.

The story of Ta-Poi is an important literary example that explores maritime activities. There are multiple pieces of evidence that mention the exchange of jewelry and gems between Kalinga and Indonesia to the extent that a potential origin source of Silver Filigree in Odisha might be Indonesia. Such similarities have been drawn across multiple crafts that can be found in Indonesia and Odisha.

The Bali Jatra festival and its celebration during the month of Kartik shows a clear understanding of the monsoon winds and ocean currents. As the maritime traders or Sadhabas would travel from Odisha to used to sail off to distant Indonesian archipelagos (Java, Sumatra, Borneo and Bali) for trade and cultural exchange then back they would foster cultural and economic exchanges that are celebrated even today.

Finally, to further elaborate that the Filigree manufacture is the oldest of the industrial crafts, the District Gazetteer reads as stated in the book Cuttack One Thousand Years, "With the exception of the of the Silver Filigree Work of Cuttack, the industries of the district are of little importance. It is after this filigree designs, Cuttack is called the Silver City". In the same book it further states 9 categories of artisans, silpi or craftsmen in Orissa, viz. Sankhari (Bangle makers), Mali (Florist), Kamar (Blacksmith), Tanti (Weaver), Kumbhara (Potter), Kansari (Brazier), Sutradhara (Carpenter), Swarnakara (Goldsmith), Ropyakara (Silversmiths) and Chitrakar (Painter).

It is important to note in the origin of the craft, the origin of the craft in a structured format. The decentralized nature of the craft lets it be practiced in individual houses with individual sellers, but it is of value to note as export orders increased, Silver Filigree transitioned into a structured systematic format.

In the book Glimpses of Orissan Culture it states, "In the plebeian category were the craftsmen engaged in the state owned or nobility owned 'Karkhanas', the independent homesteaders and other craftsmen who were organized along the family labour, but a few amongst them employing a few of their brethren. Thus, for example, the famed Silver Filigree works at Cuttack was confined to a few families." Further Cuttack, One Thousand Years states, since beginning, this craft has been hereditary and caste based. Family based subsistence oriented units continued to constitute the basic form of productive organization.

In an attempt to cater to the rising demand of the export market, Late Madhusudan Das set up the first structured factory under the name of Utkal Art Works Factory. It was a production and sales center in the artisan rich locality of Chandni Chowk. This was followed by the setting up a cooperative in 1963 with the assistance of the illustrious Biju Pattnaik under the name of Kalinga Filigree Cooperative Society.

I) Method of Production:

Silver Filigree as a craft has transitioned through time while staying constant and simultaneously adapting. The core process of the craft has stayed the same over the centuries with only a few changes in tools and components used. The majority of the change has come on the design and product front as the craft has adapted to the different rulers that ruled Cuttack and the consequent product demands.

The method of production has been divided into i) Raw Material, ii) Tools, iii) Process, iv) Testing and v) Work Cycles

Raw Material

The raw materials can be categorized into metals and chemicals.

- a. Metal composition: Different types of metal alloys are created for different purposes with varying compositions of silver and other metals. All the raw materials are sourced from local markets mostly from Naya Sadak Bazaar in Cuttack. The vendors there procure it from Ahmedabad, Mumbai, UP and Delhi.
  - i. Silver: Different grades of silver are used in the main metal alloy. The commonly used grades are 916 and 999. Only 916 silver is used to make the solder.
  - ii. Copper: Copper was traditionally mixed with the silver in the ratio of 90:10 for the creation of the desired alloy metal for the creation of filigree designs. Copper is added to increase the strength of the metal. Today, the more commonly seen mix is 92:8. Copper is also used in the solder. It is soft, a good heat conductor and resistant to corrosion.
  - iii. Zinc: Zinc is used in the solder metal to reduce the melting point of the alloy and increase strength.
  - iv. Cadmium: Cadmium has been a recent addition to the solder. This has been added to reduce the melting point of the alloy and increase the durability. It is traditionally used to confer good fluidity by lowering the melting range.
  - v. Tin: It is also used to lower the melting point.

Metal Composition Ratio:

The table below provides the average ratio of the metal composition used to create silver filigree. The composition has been duly tested and analyzed by the Institute of Minerals & Materials Technology, Bhubaneswar..

Silver	Copper, Zinc, Cadmium, Tin
91.574	4.128 + 0.908 + 1.7514 + 0.0002

- b. Chemicals: Chemicals are used as part of the cleaning and polishing process for the product.
- Borax (Suaga): Borax mixed with water is used as a flux during soldering to clean the metal surfaces to create a stronger bond and prevent oxidation.
  - Abrus Precatorius* Seed (Kaincha): The kaincha seeds are broken and ground with water to use as glue in the filigree works before soldering to keep them in place.
  - Dil. Sulphuric Acid: Dil. Sulphuric acid is used for pickling i.e. a metal surface treatment used to remove impurities, such as stains, inorganic contaminants, rust or scale from ferrous metals, copper, precious metals and aluminum alloys.
  - Soap Nut (Ritha Phala In Odia): Soap nut produces soap foam which is used to clean the filigree work.

Procedure

A. Design draft :

Once the design has been finalized, the product and motif designs are sketched on a paper and all the sizes and numbers are analyzed as per the required product. Accordingly, the quantity of the raw material is determined.

B. Silver Alloy Ingot :

Pure silver bars are weighed out depending upon the size of the melting pot and the design. Copper pieces and other metals are added along with the silver bars into a melting pot or Ghadia.

The melting pot is placed in an open furnace with the help of Siyadi or Tongs. Once the metals have melted, the molten metal is poured into a metal setting mould or Dhala. The Dhala has ridges to create ingots of different sizes as per the quantity of the alloy being created.

The same process is followed for the creation of the solder ingot. While creating the solder ingot, Zinc and Cadmium are added to the mix.

C. Wire Drawing :

The silver alloy ingot is beaten on the anvil into a thin rod.

The thin rod is created for the ease of holding as the rod is passed through the wire making machine. The wire making machine has different grooves of different gauges. Depending on the need of the design, the wire is thinned out.

Another finer machine is used to create extremely thin wire as per the gauges required in the design. The extremely fine wire is curled around a wooden stump to wind into tight circles for ease of storage. Historically, the extremely thin wire was created by passing it through an iron plate with different holes of different sizes or janta. In some cases, this is still used.

The wire is obtained by drawing the metal through the large holes. The wire is gradually made thinner by being drawn through the smaller holes, some of which are about the size of a pinhead, while others are no bigger than a pin point. This process is continued till the wire becomes thinner and finer and the requisite diameter is obtained.

Sometimes, however, to give the filigree wire more softness for drawing finer and finer, it is made into a bundle and heated in fire before pressing it through the next gauge. To pass through the finer gauge holes the end of the wire is drawn out by force with a siyadi (tong). Further to give a flat shape it is then passed through a press machine.

The wires are made in three different gauges/sizes ranging from 18 to 32 gauges. Some artisans have used 34 gauge to create finer wires, and have won accolades in the craft. Higher gauge (25/26) is for the main frame or outer frame design called Sika-wire, sub partitioning wire is a level lower than the main frame and lastly the finer gauge (30/32) wires are used for the fine filigree works called as net-wire (Jala tara in odia)

D. Main Frame design :

A metal slab or Forsee is used to measure out the thicker wire or Sika wire that is used for the main frame. The foresee is used to ensure accurate measurements of the sika wire as per the design requirement. Chimuta(tweezer) is used to bend and twist the wire and create the main frame for uniform circular shaping it is then shaped with mudi matha sabala (ring shaping rod).

An extended piece of sika wire is always left extra in the main frame. This extended piece is then used to weld the ends of the design and seal the frame. The frame is welded and not soldered to ensure maximum strength.

Smaller pieces of the sika wire are cut with a K aturi(cutter) and used to create internal partitions within the main frame. These pieces are soldered in to the main frame by using thin solder chips.

E. Creation of fine filigree designs :

There are two kinds of fine filigree designs- i) Inside the frame, ii) Dama Chain

i) Inside the frame

Each silver filigree product has a unique combination of individual designs placed within the main frame. Each individual design is made separately following a predetermined design.

The designs are made using Jali wires (fine wires), a pair of tweezers, pliers and cutters. The Jali wires are bent and shaped by hand using tweezers and. They are then cut by the cutter.

Depending on the design, the wires are also crimped using a hand-held crimping tool. The individual designs are then placed inside the main frame using a chimuta. The individual design placed in the main frame is first put in kaincha glue to keep the design in place and then soldered.

ii) Dama Chain:

Dama Chain is the creation of a continuous mesh using a knitting technique. The knitting technique is created using a straightened-out safety pin and pair of tweezers only. Wire of gauge 30 is used to knit individually while two wires of gauge 32 are twisted together before knitting to add more intricacy to the design.

The ends of the dama chain are then cut off and soldered as per use.

F. Soldering :

A fine solder dust is created with the solder ingot that is made. The solder dust is created by filing a thin fire into powder form. Soldering is done on a Mica slab with a thin mesh placed on it. The solder dust is sprinkled over the complete design and then melted using a blow torch. A pair of tweezers is used to keep the individual designs in place. Depending on the design, larger solder chips of silver are used to fix bigger pieces of the design together. Traditionally, the same was done using an open furnace, blow pipes, hand held fans and tongs.

G. Cleaning :

Once the piece is soldered it is put in a solution of water & borax powder. This is used as a flux to clean the metal surfaces, to create a stronger bond and prevent oxidation.

H. 3-D shaping and detailing :

The welded and soldered design is hammered into a mould with a dice like structure that has hollow hemispherical structures of different sizes called as Kansula. The product is placed in the hollow and lightly beaten with a stick or guba of the same dimension as the hemisphere. The stick ends with a convex structure.

The Kansula is made of brass alloys and has six sides with differently sized hemispheres on all sides. A variety of such tools with oval and concave shapes of different sizes can be found.

Small hollow hemispherical silver balls are also created in the kansula. First, silver plates are cut into small circular shapes locally called as tikili with the help of a puara (metal die) and then beaten into the kansula to get spherical structures.

Various metal dies are used to create small structures like flower petals, flowers and many other shapes which are then used to create smaller details. These dies are created locally as per the design requirement. For further detailing fine engraving is done as per the design requirement with the help of a metal graver (kalam or guli).

Once all the elements are shaped and created, it is again soldered with the help of solder plates and then finished off by proceeding towards the finishing processes.

I. Polishing :

Once the piece is complete, it is rinsed with diluted sulphuric acid. Once rinsed, it is filled with fine files to give it a smooth surface. Maskala (Burnisher) is then used for polishing silver surfaces.

J. Washing :

The final process is washing the product with soap nut or reetha water. Soap nut water is prepared using soaked soap nuts and water. The soap nuts are soaked in water for 4 to 5 hours. The completed piece is placed in a bowl with this water and brushed vigorously with a metal wire brush to give the final glow.

K. Processing and Fittings :

For various products different fittings and processing are made as per the requirement or demand.

- a) Brooches, Tie pins, cufflinks, hair pins: They are fitted with safety pins or hooks pins or press buttons according to the requirement or demand.
- b) Ear Tops and Earrings: They are fitted with clips, hooks, pierced and unpierced screws as required.
- c) Gold plating: Gold plating is undertaken in the factory and all kinds of goods are gold plated and supplied on demand.
- d) Oxidising: Filigree goods of all varieties are also oxidised to give a black finish and an anti-tarnish effect.
- e) Lacquer treatment: Lacquer treatment to all types of filigree goods is given with colorless lacquers to prevent tarnishing.
- f) Glass cases: Glass cases are created as per the demand to preserve larger decorative items.

Historically, a similar procedure was followed. The same can be read in Cuttack One Thousand Year, "The crude materials consist of silver alloyed with copper. The molten alloy is poured into a mould and the bar thus produced is beaten on the anvil into thin rod. The latter is then passed through the holes made in the 'janta' in an iron plate perforated with holes varying in size. The thin wire obtained by drawing the metal through the large holes is gradually made thinner by being drawn through the smaller holes, some of which are about the size of a pinhead, while others are no bigger than pins point. This process is continued till the wire becomes thinner and finer and the requisite diameter at length is obtained. It is said, in this way hundred twenty feet of wire can be drawn from a rupees weight of silver. The wire is then cut up into the lengths required, bent and coiled into various shapes and then arranged according to the design the work on a piece of mica placed over a tin plate. When the different kinds of wire have been arranged and the design has been filled in, they are soldered together and the mica and the tin plate are removed."

Product Line

The products made in Cuttack's silver filigree cluster have a wide range of products which have evolved with time. The betel leaf vessels, wallets, caskets, vermilion boxes and dowry items are native traditional items. The models of Boita(boat), Jagannath Temple, Lingaraj temple, Konark temple, Konark horse and wheel, Mukteswar arch were also created and exhibited abroad as miniature visual documentations of Orissan Art and heritage. The master craftsmen not only fashion ornaments and utensils in gold and silver, their deft fingers have contributed to the making of life size icons of Goddess Durga in pure silver, recognized as an artistic marvel.

The following are detailed categorizations of the products that are being made today:

- a. Ornaments: Necklaces, pendants, bangles, bracelets, earrings, toe rings, hair pins, brooches, tie and coat pins and full jewelry sets.
- b. Display items: Chariot, Jagannath Balabhadra and Subhadra idols, Konark wheel, Animal figures, Bali yatra boats, famous Odisha Temples, artificial flowers, auspicious puja items, Ratha yatra (Jagannath Chariot Festival), replicas of musical instruments.
- c. Utility products: Betel box, rose water sprinkler, card holder, hookah set, fire torch, caskets, trays, photo frame, hand mirror, ashtray, vermilion container, hand bags, mementos.

- e. Durga puja pandals: The most unique creation of Cuttack silver filigree artisans is the Durga puja medha in which from the idol of Durga and her jewelry to all other decorations are made in silver filigree.

Work Cycles

Generally, Artisans work during the day from about 11 am till 6 pm in the evening.

J) Uniqueness:

The uniqueness of the craft of silver filigree may be divided across different parameters. The parameters all have historical perspective and a chronological transition to the current scenario. The different parameters are tools, design, product and skill set.

Tools

The most distinct aspect about the Silver Filigree of Cuttack is the 3 Dimensional nature of it. It is known for products that are curved and can take realistic shapes. This is possible due to a tool that is only used in the cluster in Cuttack. Locally known as the Puara-Guba-Kansula, it is a dice like structure with an assortment of punches that when used gives the product a curved finish.

For example, a flower will be punched in the dice with indents to imitate the natural curve found in flowers instead of it being flat. There are a variety of indents and punches to choose from. To ensure that the individual fillings in the product do not come out, the craftsmanship has to be of the highest level. The welding only if done properly will allow the product to curve with all its inner fillings intact. This tool is used to create very unique products that are difficult to replicate elsewhere.

Design

The individual fillings inside each frame of a product are very unique and have a name of their own. The diversity in individual fillings available in Cuttack surpass those available elsewhere. Two of the individual designs- Dhankei and Italy are inspired by Dhaka and Italy respectively. As per artisan interviews, a visiting artisan from Dhaka introduced the Dhankei while the design for Italy was inspired by the architecture seen there.

Product

The most iconic product of the Cuttack Cluster of Silver Filigree is the Durga Puja medha seen only in the city of Cuttack. Even though puja pandals are constructed in most of eastern India, silver filigree Durga Puja medhas can only be seen in Cuttack city.

As mentioned in the book Cuttack, One Thousand Years "But above all, the most beautiful, innovative creation of our skilled master craftsmen is the silver filigree gate and decoration at the Chowdhary Bazar Puja Mandap. It is the biggest and only one of it's in the world. It was a dream of one Sri Banamali Dalai (Das) and some of his contemporaries. It came true in the year 1957-58. The items are kept in the bank locker and used every year after polish and finery. It is kept under strict police vigil and security because of lakhs of rupees is invested in it." This information was corroborated by the decedents of Sri Banamali Dalai (Das) who are still very active and practice the craft under the name of Madan Mohan Das and Company.

Another product that is only found in Cuttack is the Dama Chain. The Dama Chain is an intricate mesh like feature that is woven into each other to create an infinite loop. The continuous set of loops are woven into pieces of jewelry. Unlike the rest of the products created in Cuttack, the Dama Chain is only made by women.

The rationale behind it being made by women, as explained by the craftsmen Mr. Ashok Maharana is that the chain requires extensive patience and eye for minute detail. Women use only a safety pin and a pair of tweezers to knit the finest wire into unending loops. To increase the intricacy of the product, there are two versions of the dama chain.

In the first type a single wire is woven into loops. The second type has two wires that are first intertwined with each other and then woven into loops. This gives the product an added dimension of intricacy as the two intertwined wires add a texture to the product. The term for the two versions is single ply and double ply respectively. Dama Chains can be found in the length of 18, 20, 22, 24, 30 and 32 inches. The gauges used are 30 and 32. These chains are also made into earrings, and bracelets. Currently, there are around 15 women who work on the Dama chain only.

A unique addition post-independence is the inclusion of silver filigree in Odissi Dance. As mentioned by Padma Shri awarded dancer, Srimati Aruna Mohanty, Odissi as a dance form went through a transition post-independence, in a bid to incorporate iconic parts of Orissa into the dance form, Ikat was incorporated into the attire and silver filigree into the jewelry. Some of the now iconic Odissi pieces as stated in an article online are the Sambalpuri saree and silver tarakasi ornaments, namely choker, padaka-tilaka (necklace), bahuchudi (armlets), kankana (bracelets), a mekhalaa (belt), anklets, bells, kappa (earrings) and a seenthi (ornament tied on hair and forehead).

These ornaments are embellished with natural uncut stones with silver and gold. Odissi dance and filigree ornaments compliment and glorify each other so well that their combination creates magic in dance shows. The dancer wears a silver tika along with the part of her hair, often with decorative silver chains from forehead tika to ear. The back of the hair bun may have a large silver filigree pin or even a crescent silver wreath over the central pin. Earrings rise over the entire ear in peacock or geometric designs with large dangling bell shaped jhumkas. The dancer may wear two to four necklaces and she may have silver armbands, wide filigreed bangles and perhaps rings on every finger.

“Odissi classical dance is unique among other classical traditions of India in its use of silver ornaments. The Maharis, and Odissi dancers through the 1960's, sometimes used gold ornaments near the face and on hands, though the three-tiered silver belt has been in use much longer. Today, Odissi dancers all use silver from head to waist.

Skill Set

Cuttack as a city has witnessed the rise and fall of several empires and the invasion and occupation by Indian and external powers. Of those powers, the Muslims, Mughals, Marathas and finally the British figured prominently. Each of these has left a mark on the city and inadvertently on the product line of silver filigree. As the craft transitioned with the rulers, the product line changed to accommodate the different demands of the time. This gave the craftsmen a unique edge over the other clusters as the skill level evolved in a much more diverse manner, enhancing it along the way.

In the time of the Mughals, there was a need for products such as hookah sets, atardaan and betel boxes (Paan Daan). The British saw an increase in letter caskets, cigarette boxes, desk accessories, Christian crosses, etc. Finally, post-independence, there was a distinct movement towards locally relatable products such as deities of Lord Jagannath, Balabhadra and Subhadra, Konark Wheel, Boita (Boat) and Temple replicas. The product selection can be seen in a document in which it states the traditional utility items like Vermillion Boxes, Betel Nut Boxes, Incense Containers, Spoons, Idols, and God & Goddess were made in the cluster.

This mix of products has given the cluster an edge over the other clusters as the craftsmen of Cuttack have the most diverse range of abilities to create products compared to any other cluster in the country.

Such is the level of craftsmanship in the cluster that a craftsman during the time of a well-known Sarod Maestro ornamented an entire Sarod in Silver Filigree. The musician was a genius of his time who wanted to ornament his Sarod with the fine silver filigree work. It was fully ornamented in a day and when the great man asked about the payment for the craftsmanship he was requested to play his ornamented Sarod for two hours which the craftsman enjoyed very much.

Silver Filigree has over the years established a strong presence in the jewelry market both within the state and outside it. The product range has stabilized and mostly focuses on jewelry, display items & Durga Puja Medhas. Durga Puja Medhas are not made as frequently as once made, as the medhas do not get remade for decades. Most work is done around smaller items which even if high in quantity do not convert to high revenue as the unit cost is low per piece. This scenario makes government and private sector intervention very important.

Government Initiatives

Odisha has over 50+ Handicrafts and Handlooms and is one of the few states that has both a Handicrafts and Handlooms Policy. As per the current policy, the state is focused on increasing the livelihood of the artisans linked with the sector. It is putting in place a sustainable livelihood plan that is slowly uplifting the socio-economic status of the artisans.

The state schemes are focused on maximizing employment opportunities for the artisans while simultaneously preserving the craft heritage. There is a focus on craft tourism to drive traffic towards the on-ground sources of the crafts. Initiatives by the Tourism department of the state as well as private craft tourism players have already lead to an increase in tourists frequenting not just retail stores but also the actual production units to better understand the process of the craft.

There is a renewed focus to increase export of the craft in collaboration with the Export Promotion Council for Handicrafts and Development Commissioner Handicrafts. The government is further working towards developing a brand presence of the Handicrafts of the state. Brands are being developed for all crafts to establish a presence in the age of technology. Geographical Indications being a part of the process.

The schemes running in the sector are across training, marketing, rehabilitation, modernization, infrastructure, finances, certifications/awards, strengthening of structures and exposure. The schemes across the above-mentioned categories are as follows:

- Guru Sishya Parampra Training
- Master Craftsmen Training Program
- Craft Village Program
- Marketing Assistance and Publicity
- Silpi Unnati Yojna
- Modernization and Technological Up-gradation of Handicraft Industries
- Construction of work shed-cum-House
- Distribution of Solar Lanterns to Artisan Households
- Aam Aadmi Bima Yojna
- Handicraft Award
- Strengthening of Primary Handicraft Co-op Societies
- Design Development under Handicrafts
- Exposure Visits of Handicrafts

The overview of the State Handicrafts Department website gives a brief glimpse at the statistics of the crafts existing in the state as well as the running schemes for implementation in the handicraft sector.

Private Sector Initiatives

Silver Filigree used to have a very strong presence in the Indian as well as the international market. Historically, it is stated that the craft had great demand during WWII. Export extended to Australia, USA, Burma, Ceylon, England, etc. There is even a mention of a trade route with Iran all the way back in the 12th Century for Silver Filigree specifically. Today, that export market is almost negligible in the sector and is in dire need of uplifting. A few big orders have come from the private sector organizations in recent times.

The most recent example of this being the Utkala range of Reliance Jewels. A range of jewelry centered around different aspects of Odisha, there was a designed set based on the practice of filigree. Tanishq by Tata did a brand exercise with Silver Filigree artisans and developed a life size Tanishq logo in Silver Filigree. Maruti Udyog, the car company got small models of the Maruti 800 car made in Silver Filigree to commemorate a big event within the company.

The Odisha Men's Hockey World Cup saw an integration of Silver Filigree in the official product range of the tournament. Each participating player along with all officials received Hockey stick-shaped mementos made of Silver Filigree. Miniatures of the trophy were also created in Silver Filigree.

Locally, big jewelry brands such as Lalchand Jewellers and Khimji Jewellers source directly from Cuttack. These brands are known for their constant design innovation and promotion of the craft across the state. Due to the increased local demand, new features such as oxidization and beads/gems have been added to the jewelry product line.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Ratlam was the chief Rajput state in Malwa Political Charge of the Central India Agency. Ratan Singh, a grandson of Udai Singh the first Raja of Jodhpur, founded the state in about 1650 A.D. The Rajas of erstwhile Ratlam state were Rathore Rajputs of the Jodpur house, whose ancestor was Raja Udai Singh (A.D 1585-95). His great grandson founded the house of Ratlam and obviously gave his name to the state. The emperor Shah Jahan desiring to place a feudatory Rajput state on the eastern side of Malwa conferred special distinction on Ratan Singh in order to mark his high position. Maharaja Ratan Singh made Ratlam his capital and began his rule.

Garlic (Allium sativum) is one of most important bulbous spices. It is medicinal and widely consumed bulbous spice crops in Ratlam Lahsun (Garlic). Garlic cultivation is under horticulture, which is an important sector of Riyawan agriculture.

The whole Ratlam district lies on Malwa plateau. The general scene is of undulating country sloping towards north and marked by series of high hills and valleys. There are isolated hills and attain prominence in the southeast of the district and near the western margins of the plateau. In the west hills are dissected and slopes into the narrow valleys of seasonal streams of Mahi. Geomorphology of Ratlam district can be divided into five divisions, 1) The Malwa plateau in the east, 2) The plateau of Sailana, 3) The western hills of Sailana, 4) The Chambal valley, 5) The Mahi valley. In general Ratlam district is characterized by hilly to undulating terrain with altitude ranging between 434 m and 549 m above mean sea level.

A hot summer and general dryness characterize the climate of Ratlam district, except during the southwest monsoon season. The year can be divided into four seasons. The winter commences from middle of November and lasts till the end of February. The period from March to about middle of June is the hot summer season. May is the hottest month of the year.

The southwest monsoon starts from middle of June and lasts till end of September. October and middle of November constitute the post monsoon or retreating monsoon season. Nearest observatory is located at Ratlam, hence metrological parameters of Ratlam are used for analysis. The temperature starts rising from the beginning of February and reaching maximum in the month of May. The normal annual mean maximum temperature is 32.20C and normal annual mean minimum temperature is 18.80C. The individual day maximum temperature in May goes up to 39.70C. The wind velocity is high during the pre-monsoon period as compared to post monsoon period.

I) Method of Production:

Tools:

Hal (plough), hakkhar (barrow), Nai, kalpa khurpi (hoes), Daranta (sickle), phaora, Kodala, dantali, Obe, Sabbal (all spades), Kurda (axe), Nada, Charpala, parada, Chalna (sieves), Taramuchi (stool), Rassa (rope), Jura, Samal and Charas (water-bag). These tools are all made locally and are of a very simple and primitive

Suitable Soil:

Land for cultivation in this state is broadly classed as maletru or barani (dry land, dependent on the rainfall for its water) and abpashi or piyat (irrigated land). The crops in the first class are grown with no other moisture than that resulting from the ordinary rainfall. The prominent varieties of soil in maletru land are known locally as kali (black), bhuri (brownish), dhamni (dark brown), lal (reddish), and bhatori (stony). The superiority or inferiority of a soil is also judged by its depth, Dhamni soil is believed by some cultivators to be even better than kali soil. The black loamy soil agriculture called kali is suited. The kali soil is subdivided into uttam (superior), madhyam (middling) and kanisht (inferior) kinds according to the depth of the soil over its rocky substratum. Black soil of the first class has a depth of from 5 to 8 feet above yellow earth. Black soil of the second class is of less depth and is less productive. The third class is much poorer in both respects. The first two grow excellent rabi and Kharif.

Dhamni soil is of two kinds. The first class is about 12 feet in depth, the second about 3 feet deep over a substratum of kankar (lime nodules) and muram or gravel. A larger area of dhamni is under cultivation than kali. Bhuri soil is poorer and shallower than dhamni and is only suited to inferior crops. Lal a red coloured soil known also as bardly is found on hill slopes mixed with kankar. It grows kodra, tilli, etc. The kali, dhamni, and the bhuri soils are in some places strewn with large stones. They are then called bhatori kali, bhaturi dhamni and bhaturi bhuri. Both kharlf and rahi crops can be grown on them as the stones help the soil to retain the moisture by.

Soil for Garlic Farming

- The Riyawan Lahsun (Garlic) crop grows in all type of soils like kali, dhamni, and the bhuri soils rich in humus with fairly good potash content soil.
- Garlic Bulbs produced in heavy soils are deformed, and during harvest, many bulbs are broken and bruised.

Manure:

The cultivators of Ratlam are following traditional process of Lahsun cultivation since generations and they are applying organic manure for rich production of Lahsun. The manures are of Cow Manure, Poultry Manure, and Horse Manure.

Sowing:

The Riyawan Lahsun cultivation cycle is 135 – 150 days. The cloves or bulblets are used in the cultivation of garlic. The required cultivar with large cloves should be carefully selected before planting. Garlic thrives well in both tropical and subtropical regions. It requires rainfall ranging from 600 mm to 1200 mm and minimum temperature in the range of 5-25°C and maximum temperature in the range of 25-40°C. Garlic produces an average of 7 roots per plant. In clay loam soil, the roots dig down as deep as 59 cm. Sufficient moisture is essential within the root zone during the vegetative growth. The frequency of irrigation depends on the soil type and on the rainfall during the growing period. Flash irrigation can be applied when crevices or cracks on clay loam soils appear.

Planting Distance in Garlic Farming:

Total production cycle of Riyawan Lahsun is 170 days. The distance of planting varies from 15 cm x 7.5 cm to 20 cm x 10 cm. Planting is done using dibble or pointed stick to insert two-thirds of the length of the clove vertically into the soil or about 2cm to 3cm deep.

Mulching in Garlic Farming:

Mulch can be applied before or after planting. Mulch is evenly laid on the field with a thickness of 3cm to 5cm. Rice straw is commonly used as mulching material.

All the cloves are planted except the long slender once in the centre of the bulb. The bulbs with side growth should be discarded. Healthy cloves or bulbils are free from disease and injuries should be used for sowing and about 150 to 200 kg cloves are required to be planted in one hectare. They are sown by dibbling or furrow planting.

Dibbling:

The field is divided into small plots convenient for irrigation. Cloves may be dibbled 5 to 7.5cm deep, keeping their growing ends upwards. They are laced 7.5cm apart from each other in rows of 15cm apart and then they are covered with loose soil. June-July and October-November are the normal planting seasons for garlic.

Water Management

In preparing for planting, if soil moisture is not sufficient, it is necessary to irrigate the field a day or two days earlier. In case the soil becomes too wet after irrigating, the field should be allowed to dry until the desired moisture level is attained. The condition is best exemplified when foot prints are deep enough.

Garlic irrigation:

The first irrigation should be done immediately after sowing garlic. After this, irrigate the crop after about 10 to 15 days. Irrigate it every week in the summer month. When its flakes are being constructed, irrigate the crop properly at that time.

Before planting, the field should be given light irrigation. In garlic farming, furrow irrigation, drip irrigation, and sprinkler irrigation method are used.

Irrigation is repeated every 3rd during the initial stages. The crop is irrigated more frequently once in a week, but afterward, the crop irrigated once in 15 days.

The frequency is decreased; the crop is reached maturity the harvesting time the irrigation is stopped. Irrigation starts before planting and ends 70-85 days after planting.

Usually first irrigation should be carried out immediately after sowing. Subsequent irrigations should be given after every 10 to 12 days. Maintaining constant moisture in the soil is required during the flowering bulb development stage. After maturing the bulbs, irrigations should be reduced. For easy harvesting, irrigation should be provided just before 3 days of harvest.

Garlic yield:

The yield of garlic crop depends on many things. Mainly its variety, fertility of land and crop cares. Along with this, the varieties with long days give higher yield. In which yield from 100 to 200 quintals per hectare is obtained.

- Plant Protection.
- Pest and their control.
- Thrips: 50 % of loss of yield can be there, if it is not controlled properly. Mostly it is observed in dry weather.
- To check seriousness of thrips incidence, keep blue sticky traps at 6-8 per acre. If infestation observed in field take spray of Fipronil at 30 ml/15 Ltr water or Profenophos at 10 ml or Carbosulfar at 10 ml plus Mancozeb at 25 gm/10 Ltr water by 8-10 days interval.

Weed Management:

The first inter culture is given with hand or khurpi one month after the sowing. Second weeding is given one month after the first weeding and hoeing. Hoeing, the crop just before the formation of bulbs (about 2½ months from sowing) loosens the soil and helps in the setting of bigger and well filled bulbs. The crop should not be weeded out or hoed at a later stage because this may damage the stem and impair the keeping quality of sprouting and the cloves already formed.

Harvesting:

Crop becomes ready in 170-180 days after it has been sown. Crop can be cut down when 50% of the leaves starts getting yellowing and drying. Stop irrigation at least 15 days before cutting. Plants are pulled out or uprooted from the soil, then tied into small bundle with the help of rope and kept in field under the shade for 2-3 days. After proper drying, dry stalks are removed and bulbs are cleaned properly, after bulbs cleaned properly they are sorted and graded according to size.

Harvesting As the bulb reach maturity, the plants cease to produce new leaves and senescence starts. The top just above the neck up the bulbs weaken and bend down still remaining green. Bulb continues to increase in size and weight for some time after softening of neck and falling over. This increases due to continued accumulation of dry matter of the bulb.

Bulbs harvested after neck fall have been reported to take less time for drying and curing and to have marked reduction in the storage rot. On the other hand, if the bulbs are harvested before neck fall, it will take more time for proper drying and curing and will also be susceptible to storage disease. Thus, it will be proper to harvest the bulbs intended to be stored, one week after 50% of the plants have shown neck fall.

If the bulbs are left too long in the field they are subjected to dews and rains and thereby they may split and loosen their outer scales as a result of which they become less attractive and more prone to storage diseases. Garlic is ready to harvest when the plants begin to turn yellow or brown and begin to fall over. The digging of plants is done while there are still some green leaves remaining on the plant.

Harvesting of the bulbs is done by digging the plant carefully and lifting the bulbs using a fork. The garlic can be used straight away or it can be cured for longer storage. Garlic can be cured by hanging the plants in bunches or by spreading them out on a rack or screen. The plants should be kept intact while they cure, and we should not remove the tops until the garlic is dry.

Curing should be carried out in a cool, dry place with good ventilation such as a barn, attic or garage. Once dry, the bulbs will keep for up to a year. Garlic is crop of 4½ to 5 month duration. When the leaves start turning yellowish or brownish and show signs of drying up usually about a month or so for the emergence of seed stalks, the crop is ready for harvest.

The plants are then pulled out or uprooted with a country plough and are tied into small bundles, which are then kept in the field or in the shade for 2-3 days for curing and drying so that the bulbs become hard and keeping quality is prolonged. The bulbs may be stacked by handling them on bamboo sticks or by keeping them on dry sand on the floor in a well-ventilated room on the dry floor.

Pre Harvest Constraints of Farmers Garlic suffers from similar pest and disease problems as onions and leeks. When garlic is exposed to adverse weather condition, such as fluctuating temperatures in spring, the plants may produce garlic cloves above the ground in the stem. They are sometimes called top sets, which can be used in the normal way. There is nothing that can be done about it.

Hard neck garlic cultivars readily produce flower stalks. The developing flowers should be removed as soon as they appear and can be used for stir fries.

Soft neck cultivars occasionally produce flower stalk if exposed to adverse growing conditions such as high temperatures or drought. If the bulbs start splitting the crop was harvested too late. Shallow planting and late harvesting can lead to some of the cloves going green. They can be used as normal, but cannot be stored well.

If the foliage develops garlic pustules, the crop may be affected by leek rust. Garlic is very susceptible to this type of disease.

2. Withering of the foliage in dry weather may be a sign of onion white rot. The base of the bulbs and roots develops white fluffy mould.

3. Garlic and shallots are very susceptible to downy mildew, when the leaves start turning yellow and die off from the tip downwards. In wet weather, white mould develops on dead parts often turning darker colour later. However, garlic seems to be seldom affected.

Post- harvest management is the technology handling of an agricultural produce after harvest to prolong the shelf life, freshness and an attractive appearance. Nearly, 15 to 50 per cent of garlic is wasted due to faulty post-harvest management during harvesting, drying and curing, sorting and grading, packaging, storage, and transportation.

Post-Harvest Management Drying is done to remove excess moisture from outer skin and neck to reduce storage rot, while curing is an additional process of drying to remove the excess moisture and to allow the colour development. Garlic bulbs after curing are run over a grader or graded manually before their storage or marketing. The thick necked, splitted, injured, and diseased or bulbs with hollow cloves are sorted out. Size grading is done for getting better price and to minimize losses on account of drainage and decay. Thoroughly cured garlic bulbs are stored well in ordinary well-ventilated rooms. Garlic with dried leaves can be stored by hanging in well-ventilated rooms

Storage of Garlic: Riyawan Lahsun is very durable lahsun product and it lasts for a year without any damage. Storage of Riyawan Lahsun is conducted traditionally the famers are following traditional storage practices since generations.

J) Uniqueness:

- The Risa is turned around the chest so that front part of chest is covered by two layers of both end of risa. It is about 1.5m long and 0.3-0.5m width. It covers from top of chest to half way between xiphisternum and umbilicus

F) Description:

The motifs woven in the “Tripura Risa Textile” serve as a means to distinguish the tribes because each tribe has its own set of patterns and weaving techniques that differentiate them from the others. The main patterns of the Tripura hand-woven textiles are that of vertical and horizontal stripes and multicolored embroidery. The main areas of production of these handloom fabrics are concentrated in the rural areas, especially the sub-districts of Belonia, Kailasahar, Sonamura, Sadar and Khowai.

“Tripura Risa Textile” is a long, embroidered, hand-woven garment worn by the women of Tripura. It is usually five feet in length and is wrapped around the upper body. It is beautifully embroidered with unique patterns and comes in vibrant colours. Some of the designs are called ‘kwchak pali,’ ‘kosom pali,’ ‘takhumtwi,’ ‘khamjang’ etc. These days, the risa is not just a piece of garment but has become emblematic of the Borok people’s culture. It is gifted to distinguished visitors at every function as a sign of welcome and respect.

One of the earliest indigenous rituals involving the risa is called Risa Sormani. According to this ritual, a risa is gifted to the girl child when she reaches puberty. Her first risa marks her transition from a girl to becoming a woman. Her family, relatives, and neighbours gather together on this day to worship an indigenous deity called “Lampra”. They offer prayers for her good health and well-being. The function is accompanied by feasting and music.

The State government of Tripura aims to promote “Tripura Risa Textile” nationally as Tripura’s signature garment.

- For this, various initiatives have been taken like providing risa uniforms to anganwadi and ASHA workers and facilitating training for making risa at Tripura Handloom and Handicrafts Development Corporation.
- The Risa is being branded under the India Handloom Brand. This supports the ‘Vocal for Local’ initiative of the central government.

2. Kamchwlwi Borok

3. Duti Borok

The Traditional dress of Men in Tripura consists of 'Duti Borok' for the loin and 'Kamchwlwi borok' for the upper part of the body. But nowadays people are not wearing this except in rural areas and working clans. The male has adopted the modern style of international dress Gaffa.

Traditional Dress of Tripura for Women:

Risa: Risa is the part of the dress that covers the upper part of women. Risa is worn by draping around the back twice to provide protection and support to the chest. In Tripura, it is a tradition to wear Risa for a bride. Risa is designed with straight patterns of fabrics in both horizontal and vertical views.

Ringai or Pachera: Each clan of Tripura has a different pattern of Rignai. The distinct pattern of Rignai differentiates which clan of Tripura belongs to. Rignai is the lower half of the dress. It is like a draped skirt.

These weavers are mostly from local tribal and non tribal community. The old aged weavers, who have been working in the sectors, generally produce low cost fabrics like Gamcha, Lungi, Bedsheet, Sarees, Rignai (Pachra), Dupatta, Risha etc. The Department has been trying to upgrade their skills by providing training.

"Tripura Risa Textile" fabrics are fairly thick, as the wrap is dense and cover the weft. This gives the fabric a ribbed effect. As only fabrics of smaller widths (between 51 and 62 cm) could be woven, most of the textiles are made up of several strips stitched together.

Women wear a sarong which is a fabric 72 to 92 cm wide and 180 to 205 cm long. This is worn wrapped around the lower part of the body, and mostly worn with a blouse. The women also use a similar fabric shorter in length called a shawl.

As the winters are very cold shawls are used by men well as women as a wrap to protect them from the cold. Fabric woven on the loom is predominantly wrap face. As a result, when different colored yarn are added into the warp, the stripes become bold and achieve full strength of the color as the warp is prominent on the surface of the cloth.

Amongst the hill states, the shawl and sarong fabric is a definite indication of the tribe to which it belongs. The combination of black, red and white colors features very frequently in their textiles.

Reflected symmetry seems to be the common starting point for designs in the shawls and sarong fabrics. The composition of the textile is based on symmetry, as such similar colored stripes appearing on either edges or one half of the textile is the mirror image of the other half. Resorting to a symmetrical composition also seems logical as a sarong fabric has to be made in many parts and later stitched together to the required width.

This ensures that parts of the shawl woven separately at different times could be joined together harmoniously. As mentioned earlier, fabrics woven on the loin loom are predominantly warp faced. The tribal textiles are mostly made up of colored stripes running in the direction of the warp. The effect of the colored stripes is bold and often graphic. When the sarong is worn the stripes run horizontally.

During the reign of Raja Trilochan, the King of Tripura this form of weaving almost reached the peak. Traditional “Tripura Risa Textile” is a small piece of cloth, which they call risa, and it is used to cover breast. - Spindle: It is inserted in the fly shuttle to weave weft. The yarns are spun on it.
- Spinning Wheel: Using this, the yarns are spun to the spindles/pirns.
- Shuttles: These are used while weaving weft yarns.
- Warp Drum: Warp yarns are wound on the drum from the reel that eases the process of warping while weaving.
- Hot Water: It is used for dyeing the yarns.

Raw Materials: Basic raw material used is acrylic, cotton and sometimes silk which is used for weaving the “Tripura Risa Textile”

Dye: It is used for coloring the fabric that is being woven.

The artistic handloom industry is concentrated in a number of places in the rural areas, in the sub-divisions of Sadar, Sonamura, Khowai, Kailasahar and Belonia.

Method of Production Loin loom in Tripura:

Parts of a Loin Loom:

1. Bamboo which serves the same purpose as the warp beam in a horizontal frame loom.
  2. Thin bamboo rod which acts as a lease rod.
  3. Bamboo shed stick.
  4. Thin bamboo heddle stick which holds the yarn heddles.
  5. Wooden beater.
  6. Wooden rods which serve the same purpose as the cloth beam in a horizontal frame loom.
  7. Leather back strap.
  8. The continuous warp.
  9. The woven fabric.
  10. Mat spread on the floor on which the weaver sits.
- The loin loom or the back strap loom is an ingeniously simple device. Most of the parts are made from bamboo and wood. It is called loin loom or back strap loom because the warp yarns are stretched between two parallel bamboos, and the bamboo at one end is fixed to a wooden stick or branch driven into the ground, and the bamboo at the other end is held firm by means of a strap worn around the lower back of the woman weaver.
  - The weaver regulates the tension by bending forward and backward. If she bends forward the warp yarns become loose and if she bends backward the warp comes into tension. The loom is made of several bamboo sticks around which a continuous warp is wound. The entire length of the warp is stretched out and not wound over a beam as in frame looms.
  - The threads of the continuous warp are separated into two layers which lie one above the other. One set of warp threads is kept separate from the other with the help of a "shed stick" and "yarn heddles".
  - A bamboo of fairly large diameter is placed over every alternate thread. The threads from under the shed stick are strung with yarn heddles, while the threads which pass over the shed sticks are left free. Weaving is the interlacing of two sets of thread at right angles to one another.
  - This interlacing takes place because of a "shed" and the simplest weave require at least two different sheds. In the loin loom one shed is formed when the weaver bends forward to loosen the warp threads.
  - As the warp is loose she is able to lift the yarn heddles mounted on the "heddles stick", thereby rising every alternate warp thread. A wooden beater is inserted into the gap and made to stand on its edge to form the shed.
  - Having formed the shed the weaver leans back to bring the warp into tension and insert the weave. This is followed by moving the heddle stick closer to the shed stick, whereby the warp threads coming from the over the shed stick remain above the warp threads strung by the yarn heddles. Into this gap the beater is inserted forming a shed just like before and the second weave is inserted.
  - As the weaving progress the weaver pulls the woven fabric into a clockwise direction thereby bringing the unwoven warp forward for weaving. In the Tripura, there are making the warp.

- In the method used by the Naga, the warp is made on a horizontal frame and then stretched to its full length. Then the weaver proceeds to transfer the lease onto the bamboo shed stick and to string the warp threads with yarn heddles.
- The method of making the warp entails making the entire loom itself. The weaver sits on the floor and is assisted by another woman who travels back and forth with a bobbin of yarn, helping to build the entire length and width of the warp. The weaver separates the thread of the top layer from the bottom layer by placing them alternating under and over the shed stick. The threads from under the shed stick are then strung with yarn heddles. In this method the warp, the shed and the yarn heddles are made thread by thread.
- The warps are generally narrow, not wider than 50-60cm in width. This loom does not have a reed and the weaver varies the density of the fabric by spacing the threads closer or further apart while making the yarn heddles.
- A block of wood or stone is used as a foot support, which helps the weaver to bend backward. When the weaver has finished weaving she winds the loom into a bundle. Loin loom weaving is quite strenuous and compared to weaving on a frame loom, one cannot weave for as long a period of time.
- In the Tripura loin loom weaving is done by women only. Weaving is seasonal for those women who work in the jhum cultivation. The women weave fabrics primarily for their families and themselves. In Nagaland, one comes across many occasions where women produce shawls and sarongs on their loin loom for the purpose of sale.

The warp threads with yarn heddles:

Detail showing the manner in which the warp threads are strung with yarn heddles. Every alternate warp thread is wound around the lease rod and the yarn used to form the heddle is strung through this set of alternate threads the first shed of the plain weave is formed by threads which pass over the bamboo shed stick and the alternate warp threads strung by the yarn heddles remain below as they pass under the shed stick. The weft is inserted into this shed.

1. Lease rod.
2. Bamboo shed stick.
3. Heddle rod.
4. Yarn to make the heddle.
5. Weft.

Second shed of the plain weave:

- The second shed of the plain weave is formed by lifting the warp threads strung by the yarn heddles. The weft inserted into this shed lies above the warp threads which were raised in the previous pick
- Risa – This is a fabric used to cover the upper part of women. It covers the upper/chest part in two layers. It is around 1.5m long and 0.3-0.5m in width. Risa covers from the top and halfway to the navel. It is embellished with numerous brilliant designs. Some such designs are kwchak pali, takhumtwi, khamjang, etc. Tripuri people celebrate the adolescent ceremony of a girl child known as 'Risa Sormani'. On this particular occasion, 12-14 years old girls are given Risa to wear for the first time, and all the relatives gather to worship Lampra god.
- Both men and women use it as per the occasion. Men use it as their turban in festivals, marriages, etc. During the winter season, it is used as a muffler by wrapping it around the neck. It is also tied to the waist over the dhoti that gives strength and enables the status of the person. Young girls and boys of Tripura use it as a headscarf. Risa is offered as a mark of honor to the guests, hung down over both the shoulders in front.

Making Process:

- The art of weaving Tripura traditional saree gets initiated by the dyeing process. Water is boiled at a high temperature, and the required colour is added to it. The water is stirred thoroughly to mix the colour well in water. Cotton yarns are soaked in cold water first and arranged on the rods. These yarns are held tight together and dipped thoroughly in coloured boiling water. Multiple times of dipping the yarns are done to spread the colour uniformly. Once the yarns are dyed, they are taken out from the coloured boiling water and hung inside the room. It is allowed to dry completely at room temperature.

- Further, these yarns are used for weaving the traditional Tripura saree.
- The backstrap loom is used in Tripura for weaving the saree. All the operations are done manually here. Warp yarns are cut as per the length of fabric and fixed in appropriate tension. Two loops present in the ends of the back strap are attached to the notches of the front bar. In this sort of loom, all types of weaves can be woven. There are numerous possibilities to weave a variety of patterns.
- The backstrap is fixed to the weaver's back, keeping their legs against the footrest. This footrest is adjustable for maintaining the tension in the loom. Weaving in the backstrap loom consists of shedding motion, picking motion, and beating motion.
- The heddle stick is simultaneously lifted in the left hand; a circular bamboo bar is pressed down with the right hand. Vertically the sword is placed in the shed, and the weft yarns passed from the right side using the right hand through shuttle and picked up by the left hand. Through this sword, the weft is beaten, and the sword is taken out. Thus the center shed is made, and the shuttle is passed from the left side to the right side. Again the sword is placed to beat the weft yarn. This process is carried on repeatedly. When the weaving gets to begin, two bamboo splits work. This process continues until the pattern is woven. Patterns like colorful stripes run in the direction of the warp, and the geometric motifs are woven in the direction of the weft. These patterns, designs, and colouring all vary from tribe to tribe.

F) Description:

Bangles, traditional ornaments worn by women are the essence of womanhood and a tradition that has continued since ages. And every woman in the world who has seen lac bangles, would like and love to wear these Hyderabadi bangles as it adds more charm and glory to her. With their appealing colours and cultural patterns, lac bangles have become more fashionable for today's women. Keeping a check on the latest trends from across the country and the globe, the lac bangle-makers have adapted from old to modern trends with beautiful artificial diamonds.

Lac bangles have a touch of class and richness. Extremely popular with intricate detailing of master craftsmanship, they are the most sought-after items and studded with stones, and what have you; they are as lavish and glorious as their metal counterparts.

Bangles made from lac are said to be one of the oldest ones and among the brittle category too. Lac has been and is popular due to it being the oldest source of colour, its pliability, its advantage of adding other colours or embellishments to it and of course its cheap prices.

Laad Bazaar or Choodi Bazaar is a very old market popular for bangles located in Hyderabad and is on one of the four main roads that branch out from the historic Charminar.

While it is popularly believed that laad means lacquer (which is used to make bangles); according to local artisans it is said that Laad Bazaar got its name about 150 years ago during the time of the Sixth Nizam, Mir Mehabub Ali Khan and it also then that the craft of lac bangle making originated. To add credibility to their story, they say, is the fact that it was in Laad Bazaar that the Chowmahalla Royal Palace was constructed to house the ruling Nizam. And hence it was but natural to call the street Laad Bazaar or Street of Love or Bazaar of Fondness. The one kilometre stretch shopping strip, houses most of the shops that sell lac bangles and imitation jewellery.

According to estimates, currently, more than 15,000 people are employed by this street of bangles alone as compared to a work strength of 500 to 600 people a decade ago. It is estimated that on an average about 500 to 800 foreign and local tourists visit the bazaar each day.

The craft has acquired the form of a small-scale industry now and there are thousands of workers in Old City who earn a livelihood by making these lac bangles. They are part of the unorganised sector and work out of small units, usually their homes. In many families, it is a family affair and the whole family comes together to help and make the final lac bangles; while in other cases members of different families come together to work.

The craft was originated over 500 years ago during Mughal period. Lac bangles were worn by women in the royal households, which were decorated with precious stones as a symbol of royalty. The craft flourished over the decades and patronized by many royal families.

Hyderabad itself is known for its bangles made of glass and lacquer, and studded with stones. Lac bangles, then and now, from time immemorial have continued to literally lure not just local citizens but the innumerable tourists who have to and love to pay a visit to the Laad Bazaar.

The artisan skilfully embellishes the bangle with colors of precious and semi-precious stones. The bangles of different sizes and unique designs are created according to the latest trend. Lac bangles of Hyderabad are very popular. Motif designs are created according to the festive occasions as per the market demand.

The growth and expansion of this craft gives us some very interesting points. This craft as it was first started, was started not as at present. If we look forty or fifty years back, the different designs worked out on bangles would clearly show that it was started with bangles mostly studded with glass pieces, using lac of the chocolate colour. The reasons are not far to seek. First, the craft was in its infancy and hence the improved designs could not be adopted. Second, the craft started as a household one and hence had the investment difficulties and third, the stones of different sizes and colours were not easy to procure and perhaps the tastes of the customers too might not have developed to the present level.

Hyderabad is the capital of Telangana in Southern India, located on the banks of the Musi River and on the Deccan Plateau. It was founded in 1591 and planned as a grid with the Charminar at its centre. The city has a long history and is well known for its unique traditional arts, handicrafts, traditional foods that has evolved over the centuries. Moreover, the city is also well known for its Lacquer Bangles. From traditional designs to trendy types, one can find bangles for any occasion.

The main area of Hyderabad Lac Bangles production is Lad Bazaar, Charminar which lies in Hyderabad district of Telangana. In terms of longitude and latitude, the production area of Hyderabad Lac Bangles is 17°21'05.7"N and 78°29'16.6"E

All the workshops engaged in production of Hyderabad Lac Bangles are located in Lad Bazaar. The location of the workshops as well as the shops where these bangles are available enjoy the advantages of location. Charminar has been and still continues to attract many a visitor and invariably these visitors are tempted to visit these shops, which display a variety of bangles in different designs and in different hues. The temptation becomes so irresistible that they step into one shop or the other and be delighted at the very sight of the bangles displayed in the show cases.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Emanating from Charminar, the most famous landmark of Hyderabad city, runs to the west a road known as the Lad Bazaar, a busy crowded street with numerous shops all through. It is said that lac bangles have been made since the 15th Century in this region.

On the right-hand side of this bazaar, commencing from Charminar, is a row of shops, dealing in bangles. And it is these shops in the Lad Bazaar that constitute the centre of the famous studded bangles of Hyderabad which have occupied, through a chequered period of 5 to 6 generations, a proud and privileged position in adorning the graceful wrists of many beautiful and aristocratic women of Hyderabad.

It is interesting to observe that the history of the origin of this handicraft, which started with a group of families in the beginning, goes as far back as the Qutub Shahi days.

According to an article by Dr. P Jogi Naidu of the Archaeology and Museums, Andhra Pradesh, the origin of this great craft goes back to the days of the Qutub Shahi era. It states that the pioneers came to the city as hakims to cure people (which was their primary occupation) and bangle making acquired the form of a subsidiary one. However, there are other tales too, to their origin. Another one, as per the author of the Bangle Char Chaman, Mohd. Hussain, says that "As the trade relations between Golconda and Persia were cordial, a group of Persians, whose main occupation was hakim and subsidiary occupation was bangle making, came to Golconda at the invitation of the King and settled down here. Therefore, bangle making as an industry started in Hyderabad during the Qutub Shahi period."

However, a contrary version goes to say that the workers might have migrated from the Vijayanagar Kingdom. "There was a regular trade relation between Hyderabad and Vijayanagar Kingdoms in between 15th and 16th centuries. During this period Vijayanagar was the main centre for manufacturing the glass bangles and were sent to Golconda as it was the main market centre. As such a few families engaged in this industry might have migrated from Vijayanagar to Golconda and settled down permanently after the downfall of Vijayanagar Kingdom."

This craft of bangle making first started with a group of families working on a small scale assisted by the female members in them. Then they used to carry their loads to temple fairs or sell them to families at their doors. Slowly these bangles captured the attention and curiosity of the womenfolk and thus a great impetus was given to the families engaged in this craft. But, their investment capacity could not increase pari passu with the expansion of market. It was at this stage a few shrewd businessmen entered and tried to capitalise the situation. They gathered a few skilled workers and started a workshop. The increase in the demand prompted a few more businessmen who soon started workshops with groups of skilled workers.

It is not out of place to mention here the views of a manufacturer about the beginnings of the craft in the city. It was during the time of the father of Mir Mahbub Ali Pasha i.e., in the period of the 3rd generation previous to the present Nizam Mir Osman Ali Khan Bahadur that the bangles started to be made at Hyderabad. It only started with ordinary bangles of cheaper quality. What is still called Lad Bazaar was the place where all the buildings were constructed to house the sweethearts of the ruling Nizams of the bygone days and belonged to Serf-e-Khas estate from the beginning. The street was therefore affectionately called Lad Bazaar or Street of Love. Hindus of castes Besta, Mudiraj, Kapu, Reddi and Golla, and Muslims have been engaged in the craft in production as well as in trade.

This handicraft was first started in the city and even to this day Hyderabad claims to be the only place making this variety of bangles, i. e., the Hyderabad bangles.

I) Method of Production:

The production of Hyderabad Lac bangles can be categorized in two categories.

- A) Raw Materials Used
- B) Production

RAW MATERIALS USED:

The raw materials are the most important component in making of Hyderabad Lac Bangles.

Lac:

The main raw material in making is Hyderabad Lac Bangles is Lac. Lac is a natural resinous secretion of Lac-producing insects called Kerria lacca. The insect settles on the branches/twigs of certain host trees and shrubs such as Kusum, Palas, Ber, Semialata and forms an encrustation around it. The encrusted branches are cut and the resin is processed to remove all impurities. The resulting seed lac is utilized for making several products. Lac based bangles are considered a sign of good omen and are worn by married women on all auspicious occasions. India is one of the largest producer and exporter of lac.

It is collected from forests and is available in different qualities, dark black, brown and light golden, the latter being the best and most expensive. India is one of the largest producer and exporter of Lac. Lac is the source of resin, wax, and dye. It is sold at anything between Rs. 200 per kg to Rs. 400 a kg and stays fresh and malleable for about roughly a year. The artisans of Hyderabad Lac Bangles source most of their lac from Muzaffarpur. Locally it is termed as Chapadi.

This natural material then goes through several steps of refinement to be finally used in making the products. One of the famous handicrafts of India that are made using this natural resin are Lac Bangles.

Coal:

Coal is used as fuel throughout the production process.

Metal Wires:

Rozan:

Resin Crystals locally referred as Rozan are used to make base mixture for the bangles. The artisans mainly use two types of resins, namely Yellow Rozan and Black Rozan.

Giya Pathar Powder:

It is a powder obtained from Soapstone, also used in the base mixture for the bangles.

Color pigments:

Color pigment powders are mixed with chapadi/lac to make blocks of various colored lac. These color pigments are often called by local names such as pevdi (yellow), gulabi (pink), hara (green), neela (blue), angoori (violet) and chamki (gold)

Stones and beads:

Stones and beads of different colors are used to embellish the bangles. It is available in wide range of types and color

Tools:

Artisans use the following tools to create an elegant craft

- a – Chimta or Tong
- b – Flat Wooden tool
- c - Metal Base and Hattha
- d – Wooden Stick
- e – Wooden Roller
- f - Cutter
- g – Round Wooden Roller
- h – Farma
- i - Tweezer

Coal burner:

This is used for heating and melting of the lac.

Shallow vessel:

This is generally an aluminium vessel used to melt lac either to make colors or normal lac rod.

Metal Base and Hattha

Wooden Stick

The wooden sticks are employed to hold small chunk of colored lac.

Flat wooden tool:

It is also termed as Hatta. It is a flat and plain surfaced wood piece with a handle on the top. It is mainly used to pull out thin coils of lac from the wooden rod to put around the metal bangles. This is further used for pressing and shaping lac bangles for sizing.

Cutter

The cutter is used to cut off thin coils of Lacs to place them on aluminium bangles.

Tweezers:

Used to pick and place stones to embellish the lac on the bangles.

Round wooden rod:

It is a cylindrical wooden tool used to get the bangles in proper circular shape and sizing.

Farma

It is a wooden rectangular block with a round cavity in the middle. It is used along with the wooden roller to flatten the bangles further and prepare them to get embellished.

PRODUCTION PROCESS

The art of making Hyderabad Lac Bangles is a tedious process involving numerous elaborate processes. The bangles are usually made in small workshops which are located in narrow lanes of Laad Bazaar itself. The production of Hyderabad Lac Bangles can be categorized into following stages:

Preparation of Materials

This involves preparation of the base mixture, which is used to form bangles and the preparation of colored lac Blocks, which are applied over the base mixture after some further development.

Base Mixture

To prepare the base mixture, chapadi or Lac pieces is first melted in a shallow vessel or kadai. When it is in a semi-molten state, other components viz. yellow rozan and black rozan is added. It is then heated until they melt and combine into a yellow-colored liquid. The mixture is continuously stirred, and water is added to facilitate the stirring process.

While the liquid mix is still heating, giya powder is added, which blends until the mixture thickens. Addition of giya powder act as a hardner and provides more stability to the base mixture. Once the mix is ready, it is cooled down a little then kneaded into rolls, ready to be used on the bangles.

Colored Lac Blocks

Chapadi pieces are stuck to an end of a lakdi and heated till they reach a semi-molten state. In this semi-molten state, desired colored powder is added to dough and mixed well. Melted colored lac is rubbed over normal lac until it absorbs the color. Once the desired color is achieved, the colored chapadi dough is kneaded into small blocks of colored Lac. A part from the above-mentioned process, the artisans also prepare thin metal bangles beforehand. The lac is pressed and stuck on the brass metal bangles.

Bangle Making:

Normal lac is stuck/pasted thickly on a wooden rod and rolled over a flat surface to make it into a cylindrical shape. This lac is then heated slowly over the coal burner. The heated lac is continuously pressed and rolled over the flat iron plate with the help of wooden tool. The colored lac is heated simultaneously and then applied evenly by rubbing it on the lac. Once the color has been applied to the lac base it is again shaped into a thin coil and cut off from the plain lac rod. The width of the bangle varies as per the design incorporated on the bangle. Brass or steel is used as base for the lac. The metals are first converted in the shape of the bangles and the thin lac coil is rolled on the brass or steel base. For a thin lac bangle 3 thin brass bangles are kept together and on that lac coil is rolled, in case of steel base, the base thickness is made according to the required width of the bangle. The thickness and the length of the coil approximately depend on the final shape and size of the bangles. The semi-finished bangle is slipped into a round wooden beam with a tapering end for adjusting to the proper shape. The bangles are kept aside for drying.

Embellishments (Studding of Stones):

The bangles are normally embellished with pearls, semi-precious stones, mirrors, beads etc. For applying the stones, they are heated over a tin plate kept on a small burner. The base of the stones gets heated and easily melts the lac surface on which they are placed and stick there after cooling. They are picked up one at a time and stuck on the bangle. The process requires great precision. The women members of the artisan's family do the embellishments.

Finishing

Before the products are dispatched for sale or to the market they are inspected for its finishing. The final product is checked for blemishes such as rough finishing, shade variations, any breakages, etc.

- The demand for these masks was confined to the traditional theatres called Bhaonas in Assam. Presently the masks are being made both for religious as well as commercial purposes. Several local youths in Majuli are taking a keen interest in this traditional art form which can contribute towards livelihood generation.
- Masks are also worn by some of the characters of rasayatra (frolic of Lord Krishna with the gopis, his consorts), invariably performed annually in each satra.
- Traditionally, masks are made to depict only the mythological characters, nowadays those are also made to highlight the characters of modern drama, and also to use as decorative objects.
- In the simplest societies every individual can and does perform all the secular activities of his community. In some societies this expertness gives rise to special craftsmen; or certain men may in their spare time specialize in certain crafts.

F) Description:

Assam with the beginning of the medieval ages, under the cultural and socio-religious reformations where a multifaceted figurine and reformer, Saint Sankardeva introduced the Neo-Vaisnavism in whole region and in order to propagate his ideology of devotion and social harmony he incorporated various art forms like painting, dance, music and theatrical performance embedded with a small galaxy of vivid characters of masks which represents the wide range of images and emotions.

The masks of mighty Ravana, Garuda (the mount of Vishnu), etc. emit mentionable peace, coyness, and amiability. While moulding the faces of demoness Surpanakha (sister of Ravana), Narasimha (an incarnation of Vishnu), etc., the craftsman strictly abides by the description of the features given in the scriptures.

The mask makers used to add small quantity of kerosene to the paste of kumarmati for mask making. They opine that adding of kerosene gives the mask a longer life because easily available kerosene acts as insecticide.

The mask maker of Majuli also made some of the masks with movable parts which provide more effectiveness to the mask. The ornaments added to the head, horn etc., of the masks in such a manner that the ornaments can move freely adding attractiveness to his creations.

To make the masks lighter nowadays the craftsmen added more thermocol instead of adding more paste of kumarmati, etc., to a mask. Adding of thermocol made the mask lighter and the actors feel comfortable by wearing these mask. Besides the traditional mask they also make small mask for the decoration of drawing room, motor car, etc.

Conventional masks restricted the actors to static facial expressions. But this has changed with innovators like the Majuli mask artists allow actors not only to move their limbs but also their eyes and lips, making the performances livelier without compromising on the aesthetics. To promote the art of mask making, artists now hold workshops both within and outside the state. They also make small masks in the form of wall hangings, which are popular among the masses.

Different Type of occasions and related with Mask and its relevance with performances

- [1] Khuliyabhaona is a theatre performance of the Darrang district. Wooden masks are used for characters like Ravana, Hanuman and Sugriv.
- [2] Bharigan (also known as bhaugan) is a folk performance of the pre-Sankardeva period, prevalent especially in the south Goalpara region of Assam. It is practised by the Rabha community on the basis of themes from the Ramayana.
- [3] Neo-Vaishnavism was a sociocultural and religious movement led by Srimanta Sankardeva during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.
- [4] Mahanta, 'Ankiya Bhaonar Anyatam Ahariya Paramparagata Mukha Silpa.'
- [5] Cihna Yatra was the first play written and staged by Sankardeva, where he exhibited the great cultural asset of Assam called Vrindavani Vastra, a tapestry exhibiting the saptavaikuntha (celestial abode of Vishnu). Sankardeva used masks for the first time in CihnaYatra.
- [6] Rasa festival (Rasa Mohotsav) is a festival of Assam. The people of Majuli and Nalbari districts fervently celebrate this festival.

Types of Masks practiced in Majuli: The Mukha (masks) of Majuli are mainly divided into two broad themes are Laukik Tsumukha (worldly and natural Masks), the masks which are morphologically influenced by the natural forms like animal and human, are called Loukik Mukha whereas the Oloukik Tsumukha (Unworldly and supernatural Masks) are the interpretive images of the super natural and super human being like God, Goddess, Devil, Demons, and the anthropomorphic forms which could not be observed in the visible reality.

Further these masks are spread into three main branches according to their size Mukh-Mukha or Face masks (Normal sized Mask) these kinds of masks are generally made to worn over the head or to cover the face so they are popularly called mukh-mukha or face masks.

There are two types of mukh-mukha one which covers the whole head and another which hides the front or half of the face only. Models of mukh-mukha are the masks of Lord Brahma, Vishnu, Krishna, common devils old man and women, face of lions, cows, birds, and other normal creatures.

Lutukori-Mukha or Hanging masks the word lutukori derived from two words one is Lutu means hanging and another Kori means hands. Thus it means the masks with hanging or movable hands. This mask is made in such a way that, when the actor attires this mask he could move his body parts like head, hands, legs, mouth, and eyes in connection with the relative limbs of the mask. And the mask makers employs some hinges of cane and bamboo with particular technique accordingly to join the different limbs of mask and to make it functional with the limbs of the actor, moreover the masks are made by following the certain measurements of wearer.

Models of these masks are comprises the masks of Botu-Baman (full figure of dwarf Brahmin), Kumbhakarana, Surekha Rakshasi, (common and giant devils and demons) elephant and big serpents Bor-Mukha or Cho-Mukha (Huge masks) are the giant ones which can sometime envelopes the whole body of the wearer. To make such kind of masks, andhari (rings of cane) and Kamis (smooth flat plinth of Bamboo sticks) are tied along the body to carry the mask, and function with it properly due to huge size.

Similarly masks are supported with Kandhamani (separate sticks to lift it on shoulder) from inside which can be affixed on the body of the wearer to move and dance with it during the performance. In order to make the mask durable and functional as per size it is woven by using two layers of bamboo Kathi.

Models of such masks are Varaha, Narasimha (giant boar and lion anthropomorphic Incarnation of Lord Vishnu respectively), giant Ravana with ten heads and several hands, and other supernatural characters.

Wooden masks: These types of masks are made by cutting and chiselled the logs of wood which fixed by each other with screw and hinges. The detailed features of the face like nose, ears, mouth, and eyes are made separately and then fixed on the basic structure. Mostly single kind of masks that is Mukh- Mukha (face masks) is made by wood and this technique in Majuli. And that may be of two types one which covers the half or side of the face only and another which worn over the head or complete head mask. After preparing the masks it has been painted by selected colours according to the requirements of characters.

This type of masks is difficult to make and not much feasible to use, thus not made frequently Kaporar Mukha (Masks of clothes): are made by mainly three materials that are cotton fabric, cotton, and thread. Initially the basic shape is made by stitching the clothes together like a pillow cover, then envelop of cloth is crammed by cotton according to the shape and size followed by stitched and bunged up by all the sides. After that hairs, moustaches, eyebrows, nose, teeth, nails and ears are fixed superficially.

Mainly two kinds of masks made by this technique are Mukh-Mukha and Lutukuri Mukha but merely in specific requirement and that of masks of common size and shape as these are not much durable and relevant to the moist climate of the region.

Theme of Mask in Majuli:

It is considered that our face is the index of our mind and mode of communication for each and every emotion like happiness, grief, laughter, anger, affection and many others expressions. Our face regularly expresses itself, by the lines, colours, grains, and the changeable forms of the face beneath different situations. Other limbs of the body are supplementary and vivacious in expressions, but face is primary and vital in visual and acoustic art of acting, which mostly depends upon it.

The masks of Majuli are basically the delineation of each and every expression of human life and a step ahead representational visual form of classic Indian Sanskrit literature and its vivid and imaginary characters as the masks persist the high quality to express and evoke the particular emotions, for which it made through all its facial elements like gesticulation and morphology of eyes, eyebrows, nose, ears, mouth, lips, teeth, tongue, lines of forehead, colour and texture of skin, are the remarkable silhouettes of epics and scriptures.

Therefore, the theme of masks of Majuli is entirely spiritual so as to base upon the imaginative characters of Ramayana, Mahabharata and Purans, depicted initially in the plays of Sankardeva and Madhavadeva and continued in the later trends of Vaisnavism.

The morphological features of Sattriya masks are usually derived from natural forms. The masks possess human (anthropomorphic) or animal attributes (theriomorphic), or both. There are two types of masks—loukik (worldly) and oloukik (otherworldly, supernatural). Masks based on natural forms of human beings and animals are known as loukik mukhas. On the other hand, oloukik mukhas are mythological characters with exaggerated features, including the 100-hooded Kaliya Nag, 10-headed Ravana, and Brahma with four faces.

On the basis of structural process, masks are divided into three types:

1. Mukh mukha or Mur mukha:

Masks made only to cover the face of the actor are known as much mukha. During performances, actors wear these masks over their face and cover the rest of their body with colourful cloth. Characters like Maris (Maricha), Xubahu (Subahu), Chakrabat, Upananda, Surpanakha are enacted with much mukhas.

Mukh mukha of a demon (Courtsey: Akhyai Jyoti Mahanta)

2. Mukha or Su Mukha:

These masks cover almost the entire body of the actor. Various parts of the mask are made separately before being assembled during the performance. The head of the mask is called mukha and the body is called su, which is why a bor mukha (large mask) is also called mukha-su or su-mukha.

The actor's body from the waist down is covered with a skirt-like garment—mekhela, ghorī or ghagra—hiding the legs from the audience. The bor mukha is around eight to 10 feet tall, much taller than the actors who can barely reach the chest or stomach of the mask. They view the audience through the tiny holes near their eyes. These masks are heavy but since they are made of bamboo, they can be carried with little difficulty.

The size of the masks reflects the majesty of the characters like Ravana, Narasimha, Moī Danava, Narakasura, Banraja (or Banasura) and Kumbhakarna. As they are three-dimensional, they resemble sculptures

3. Lutukai or Lutukori or Suti Su Mukha:

Lutukori mukhas are smaller than bor mukhas. Their heads are not tied to their bodies. Since body parts are separate elements in lutokori masks, they allow ease of movement. The actors wear these masks for the roles of demons such as Putna, Taraka, Trishira, Dundubhi, Shankhasura and Bakasura. These masks are seen more during the Rasa festival than regular bhaona performances. Lutukori mukha (left) and bor mukha (right) of Narasimha (Courtsey: Akhyai Jyoti Mahanta)

4. Wooden, Fabric and Earthen Masks:

Xaasor mukha is a type of mask made with basic bamboo, wooden or earthen frames, by pasting around 10 layers of paper pulp or cotton fabric on it. The gum required for pasting the layers of paper is made of wheat flour, seeds of kendu tree and hawthorn. Other important ingredients include kumar mati (potter's clay) and cow dung, especially used in making fabric masks. In this process of mask making, multiple masks can be produced using the same xaas (mould or frame). Actors find these masks convenient because of their light weight. Although its simple production process makes it commercially viable, it dilutes the originality of the bamboo mask culture of Sankardeva.

While making fabric masks, required amount of cotton is stuffed inside double layers of cloth and given shape by stitching its boundaries. Though used mostly for mukh mukhas, fabric might also be employed in lutukori mukhas.

The various other materials for mask making include earthen pots, old, round bottle gourds and the sheath of betel-nut tree. These masks are either used in paddy fields to keep birds from destroying newly germinated seeds or for children's amusement.

The practice of making masks from kuhila (pith plant) is believed to have existed in Bongaigaon district even before Sankardeva's era. Miniature kuhila masks are regularly used in puppet shows in Assam.

Majuli Island is an island in the great Brahmaputra in its upper region, till recently a part of the Jorhat District of Assam, Majuli is now a full-fledged district of the State with nearly 2 lakh population (1, 67, 204 with a density rate of 300 per sq. kms and about 500 sq. kms in area. Once a large island -as large as to measure about 160 miles in length -from Tekeliphutarmukh in the east to Kaliabar in Nagaon in the west, and 16 miles in breadth, at the maximum, by the close of the 19th century, it has ever been a beautiful landscape with numerous river channels -dead or alive, ponds and swamps, flora and fauna and many other geographical and topographical distinctions and varieties.

Jorhat is an administrative district of the Indian state of Assam situated in the central part of the Brahmaputra Valley. The district is bounded by Majuli on north, Nagaland state on the south, Charaideo on the east and Golaghat on the west.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Majuli is a river island in the Brahmaputra River, Assam and in 2016 it became the first island to be made a district in India. It had an area of 880 square kilometres (340 sq mi) at the beginning of the 20th century, but having lost significantly to erosion it covers 553 square kilometres (214 sq mi) as at 2014. Majuli has shrunk as the river surrounding it has grown.

The island is formed by the Brahmaputra River in the south and the Kherkutia Xuti, an anabranch of the Brahmaputra, joined by the Subansiri River in the north. Majuli island is accessible by ferries from the city of Jorhat. The island is about 300–400 kilometres (186–249 mi) east from the state's largest city Guwahati. It was formed due to course changes by the river Brahmaputra and its tributaries, mainly the Lohit. Majuli is the abode of the Assamese neo-Vaishnavite culture.

It is on the strength of this cultural heritage that Majuli was proposed to the UNESCO by the national Government to be enlisted as a world heritage site in the cultural landscape category.

Already a homeland for the Deuris and the Kacharis, two aboriginal tribes of the Brahmaputra Valley, the island experienced the flow of the Mising tribe towards the close of the 18th and early 19th century from across the old channel of the Brahmaputra –the Luit, who began their settlement almost over the entire northern fringe of the island along the sides of the old river channels. Their number gradually grew and by the mid-20th century it increased to comprise about 70 per cent of the total tribal population of the island, whose strength, at present, stands at about 46 per cent of the total population of the island. The rest are caste-people including some Bengalis- chiefly the erstwhile East-Bengal immigrants, the Marwari traders, and others.

The medieval historical documents clearly mention it to have existed at least by the early 16th century by its historic name Majuli, if not much earlier.

Assam has been a centre of vivid culture, and rich heritage of masks or Mukha in Assamese, deeply persuaded by the cult of Neo-Vaisnavism of Sankardeva in the fifteenth century which represented a distinct and noble scenario in Assam in the various aspects including Art and culture.

The sacred atmosphere of Satras gave shelter to the vivid kind of art forms like dance performances, raga based music and songs, illustrated manuscripts, wood-carvings and reliefs to adorn and depict the Vaisnavite thought among the spectators and visitors of the Satras and conspicuously the art of Mask-making and performance which specifically used in Bhaona (theatrical performances). Mask culture is basically developed together with religious theatrical performances and Vaisnavite dramas, written and brought into tradition by Sankardeva who wrote and translated many of songs (Bargits), dramas (Ankiyanat), epic poetry, theoretical essays, Nat (Skit), Bhaona (Drama).

The Bhaona represented the functional aspects of plays written on the Ankia-Nat (Scripts, of Drama). It is a form of theatre brought into being by Sankardeva. Initially it was not in a proper form of written play as the first organised performance of Chinha yatra (dramatic procession) was mere a dramatic display aimed to endearing over the reluctant community in which the show depicted the silhouettes of the mythical seven Vaikunthas (abode of Vishnu) painted by Sankardeva himself on scrolls commenced by the Sutradhara (an orator, demonstrator and the running commentator, is the main featured performer who dances, recites the verses, introduce the characters, give them on spot directions, announces their entrance and relevance, and correlate the whole performance on the stage in sequence, he is a trained musician and dancer including multidimensional qualities of performance) further the show was assembled with musical group of singer and instrumentalists and only the two character of Vishnu (Hindu God) and Laxmi (Goddess) but there was no procession of the linear narrations.

I) Method of Production:

Assam has a long tradition of mask making. Although bamboo is usually the raw material of choice, wooden masks have been used for centuries by communities in lower Assam and are still common in khuliya bhaona of Darrang district and bhari gan of the Rabha community. Masks are intrinsic to the Sattriya arts of the state, which flourished as part of the Srimanta Sankardeva-led Bhakti movement (also called Neo-Vaishnavism) in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

Mask-making tools and Raw Materials:

The first step starts with making of bamboo splits and basic armature of mask with these splits. Bahan-Kathi (smooth, thin and flexible strips of bamboo): to make the Bahan-Kathi, a bamboo of two or three years old growing and flexible has been preferred and incise into the pieces of two and three sections toward the length.

Then by a sharp knife long and smooth chiselled stripes (Kathi) are made from the inner bark of the bamboo. Soli (a thin, long and round slip of bamboo) by leaving six of seven pubs of a matured bamboo from its root end or ground, rest of appropriate pubs are separated and incised into required length of pieces.

Then by shaping round and smoothened those with knife Solis are made. Kami (Lath) for making of Kami the upper pubs of bamboo has been chosen, by leaving seven or eight pubs from the ground, the remaining pubs are separated and by removing the inner mass of bamboo Kamis are made. Betor-sut (a fine split of cane used as a string or rope) for making the thread or rope initially cane has to be dried properly, then its outer layer are removed and from the inner mass fine and flexible four or five pieces stings are chiselled carefully by knife.

Cloth: small pieces of cotton cloth and sometimes big according to the size of armature, cloth mixed with special kind of processed clay or potter clay are used to cover the armature of the mask.

Atha jatiya Mati: (glue like Mud) this is processed or glued mud made from potters clay made by keeping such clay in big vassal with water are made for apply with cloth on the armature.

Gubar-mati: (Cow dung clay) the clay is made by mixing calf dung in the potter clay properly by hands for covering and making the smooth base layer of the mask.

Kuhila: (Aeschynomene Indica) it is a kind of small plant of white colour found in the low-laying areas of Assam. By collecting the appropriate plants from the field and removing its skin and kept it for dried. The proper dried material is utilized to make the teeth, fingers and nails of mask.

- The artisans of Majuli and Assam principally prepares masks from bamboo, clay, earthen pot, gourd shell, pith plant, sheath of areca nut leaf, cloth, wood, etc .
- Masks are made from perishable raw materials like bamboo, cane, potter's clay, cotton cloth, cow dung, jute fibre, paper, sholapith, and natural colours. Thus, they cannot be preserved for long.
- Bamboo mask making requires two-to-three-year-old jatibanh (a type of bamboo). Other species of bamboo are too thick to bend and their splits crack easily. The bamboo has to be cut into two to three hollow pieces (paab). Traditionally, bamboo pieces are kept in pond for about a week so that glucose seeps out and insect attacks are preempted. Alternatively, the bamboo pieces are boiled in water with lime.
- Potter's clay is preferred for making the base of the masks, because it is sticky and pliant and becomes hard once it dries. Cow dung is also used but it has to be calves' waste, which is smoother and less fibrous. A small amount of kerosene is mixed with cow dung, as it acts as a disinfectant and deodorant.
- The masks are painted with natural colours extracted from hengul (vermillion) for red, hiatal (arsenic) for yellow, indigo for blue, khorimati or dhawalmati (white clay) for white, tree leaves for green, and ash collected under an iron pan or kerosene lamp (chaki) for black. Hengul and hiatal are ground on a stone slab (pota) for at least a week to get the ideal luminescence. The more it is ground, the more it glows. Colours are stored in different bamboo tubes. Gum mixed with colour are extracted from wood apple or tamarind. Sholapith is used to lessen the weight of the mask and mould facial features while jute fibre is used for making hair.
- In the past, artists used pigeon feathers, hair of goat or squirrel, and jute fibre to make colour brushes on bamboo sticks.

Process of Mask Making:

- In Assam there is a rich heritage of mask making. The mask makers of Assam have shown great resourcefulness in selecting and combining the available materials, bamboos, cane, clay, cloth, pith plant (Aeschynomene indica), wood, etc.,.
- To make a mask the craft man fetch a local variety of bamboo known as jatibanh (Bambusa tulda Roxb), which is neither immature nor very mature.
- Then with the help of a machete (da) the bamboo is cut into pieces of about 2 to 2.5 meter in length.
- These bamboo pieces are kept under water of pond or pool for a period of 5 to 7 days.
- The soaking of bamboo pieces in water prevent insect attack and provide more flexibility to the bamboo tubes.
- Then with the machete tubes are longitudinally divided into a few pieces from which splits are made with the help of a sharp knife (katari).
- These bamboo splits are woven in open hexagonal pattern to make 7 the base of the mask.
- 'In hexagonal work the wefts instead of being horizontal and vertical are worked in three directions, forming in open work hexagonal spaces in close
- In Assam mask is an integral object of the satras, the Vaishnavite monasteries. It is an indigenous craft with significance in the socio- cultural life of the people of Assam.
- The process of mask making requires split bamboo to be arranged in a hexagonal shape.

- In Assam, paddy seeds to be sowed the following year are carefully kept in a bamboo basket called tum, which is weaved in open hexagonal pattern. Since paddy is considered Lakhimi (Lakshmi), the goddess of wealth and prosperity, the guiding theory of making masks from these hexagonally arranged bamboo is called Lakhimi sutra. It is also known as Vishwakarma mur (theory), after the presiding deity of craftsmen and architects.
- To make the basic structure of the mukh mukha, 32 hexagons are formed out of 18 splits of bamboo. Its edges are trimmed and it is encircled with cane. Small pieces of cotton cloth dipped in potter's clay are placed on the skeleton for the base layer of the mask.
- In the second stage, a mixture of clay and cow dung is applied on it with a bamboo scraper (karani), and the features of the mask become clearly visible. Then comes chehera-diya (giving the appearance), when the mask is dried in the sun, and features like moustache, crown, hair and ornaments are added to it. While it is still semi-dry, fabric dipped in clay is glued to it, and it is again smoothened by the scraper. Cow dung provides the mask a smooth finish, and it is left in the sun.
- Finally, the masks are painted to be displayed.

J) Uniqueness:

Cultural heritage influences every aspect of life. Man has made the masks in dance rituals, dramas, folk songs, temples and different socio-cultural context. The use of masks in rituals or ceremonies is a very ancient human practice across the world.

This mask or mukhas are said to be the base of the Assamese culture and tradition. They are worn mostly in bhaonas. Materials like bamboo, cane, cloth, clay etc. are used for making masks. Samaguri Sattri is a place of conservation and retention of vanishing art form of mukha. Sankardeva's philosophies had transcended the boundaries of religion and culture and hence today Majuli is one place where devotion has mingled with art in a unique way.

- The art of mask making is a unique feature of Majuli. The masks are mostly used by artists for enacting religious stories in the form of drama.
- The masks are made of bamboo with the combination of cloth and paper. It makes it lightweight and the actors can carry it with ease.
- The different types of masks made in Majuli are sometimes small and big. These are replicas of gods and goddesses, demons, birds, animals, etc.
- The masks at times cover only the mouth of the actor known as Mukh-mukha or the whole mouth known as Suti-mukha or Lotokai Mukha. Occasionally it also covers the whole body known as Soo Mukha. The skeleton is first made with bamboo and then covered with paper or cloth. Then the required shape and contours are given by using mud. At last the mask is coloured with natural colourants or homemade colours.
- What differentiates these masks from other folk masks across the country is that these are made from indigenous material of the island and not Plaster of Paris, and without the use of synthetic colour.
- Special attention is paid to intricate details and technicality (newer kinds of masks have movable jaws, making dialogue delivery easier). The traditional art of making masks is passed down from father to son or from the guru or teacher at the Sattri to the students.
- The technique involves making a three-dimensional bamboo framework onto which clay-dipped pieces of cloth are plastered. After drying it, a mix of clay and cowdung is layered on it. This helps to add detail and give depth to the mask. Jute fibres and water hyacinth are used for beard, moustaches and hair. Once the mask is complete, a kordhoni (bamboo file) is used to burnish the mask. And finally, drama is added to the masks with deft painting. The mask-makers of Majuli prefer using vegetable dyes and colours derived from hengul (red) and hentul (yellow) stones.

- Three different types of masks are made. The Mukha bhaona covers the face, Lotokoi, which is bigger in size, extends to the chest and Cho Mukha is a head and body mask. The masks are made exactly the way luminary Sankardeva described the characters in his Ankitya Natya from which bhaonas have emerged. These bamboo masks are light in weight and comfortable for the performers to wear. It takes approximately 10 to 15 days to make the mask.

The Assam Majuli Manuscript Paintings illustrated numerous stories and chapters taken from the great Hindu epics Ramayana, Mahabharata and above all subject from the Bhagavata Purana. The paintings of the Bhagavata-Purana mainly concentrate to depict different stories and events related to the supreme God Lord Krishna.

There are three styles of manuscript writing which are popular in this region :-

1. Gargayan script- this style was popular during the reign of the Ahoms around Gargaon in the Sibsagar area. This type of script is very artistic in character. Well-educated writers were patronized by Ahom kings to practise this school of script.
2. Kaithali - this style is associated with the Kayastha community. Suvankazri, Kitabar Manjari and Hasti Vidyarnava by Sukumar Bankayastha are the examples of this style script. In lower Assam, the kayasthas are known by the title of Lahkar and hence known as Lahkari script or letter.
3. Bamunia- The writer of Bamunia scripts were the Sanskrit scholars or people associated with the study of Sanskrit(Devanagari) and Kamrupi script. In the script of their writing, there is an influence of the structure of Later-Brahmi or evolved Kamarupi script.

This art of paintings and manuscript writing was patronized by the Ahoms and also by the Sattras. The Ahoms mostly patronized the translation and original works of secular nature, while the Sattras prepared the Assamese rendering of the Bhagwat Purana, the epics and other Puranas bearing religious significance and importance in the context of Neo Vaishnavism. The earliest illustrated manuscript of Assam is the Adya Dasama of the Bhagwat Purana rendered into Assamese by Shri Shankaradeva, Chitra Bhagwat (Manuscript with painting).

1. Likhak was mainly involved in copying from original text
2. Khanikar prepared colors and illustrated the text

Together they prepare the surface of manuscripts, colors and write texts in different styles. Historically, the Ahom kings used to patronize and support their own copyists under the supervision of a royal officer called likhakar barua meaning superintendent of scribes.

The royal court also attached a set of compartments called gandhiya bharal for the preservation of royal manuscripts records and letters of the palace. The various styles of manuscript writing were developing different artistic schools with different artists expressing their artistic penmanship.

There is influence of devangari, their script shows that they exhibit the style and structure of the modern Assamese script. In Bamunia script the letters show the similarity with Kaithali and Gargaon style. Example of this style of scriptwriting is to be found in Subodhini Tika of Bhagavata Gita by Sridhar swami or Bhakti Ratnavali by Mahadeva. The origin of the Assamese script developed from the Brahmi script. The script was associated with old Sanskrit language.

The three stages of development of Assamese script are:

1. Early Period: 5th to 13th Century
  2. Middle Period: 14th to 19th Century
  3. Present Period: From of 19th Century (with the publication of Arunodoi in 1846) to present time.
- Manuscripts are wrapped in white paper and with cloth to protect it from dust and insects. Manuscripts have been sorted on the basis on the content. Each set is labeled as per the subject of the manuscript. Brief inventory of the manuscripts exist in each Sattra.
  - In the Sattras of Majuli, 8 important drama (Nat) of Shankaradeva are preserved. The dramas such as Kali damana (Subjugation of the serpent Kali), Patni Prasada (favour to Wives), Keli Gopal (Sport with the milkmaids) Rukmini Harana (Abduction of Rukmini), Parijata Harana (The theft of the flower Parijat) and Rama-vijaya (The Conquest of Rama) are still performed.
  - The Hostividyaavarnava in Auniati Sattra, the Anadi Patana in Purani Chamaguri Sattra, the Bhakti Ratnavali in Kamalabari Sattra, Chittra Bhagawata and four others in Dakhinpat Sattra, Chitrabhadragawata in Bengenaati Sattra are still preserved. The Narasingha and Bah Jengani Sattra and also the Kathbapu Sattra also preserve these pictorial manuscripts.
  - The art of manuscript writing is continuing in each Sattra of Majuli Island. It is one of the prime concerns and responsibilities of the Sattras to train and educate the younger generation of the Bhaktas.
  - Proficient Bhaktas are trained under the supervision of the masters of the Sattra. Hence, the Sattras act as main centers for the promotion of traditional form of manuscript writing and painting in its original form.
  - Primarily due to the emergence of Sankaradeva's religion, a vibrant cottage industry came into being and there were distinct communities - the khanikars, the Likhaks and the Patuās - whose subsidiary means of livelihood was the transcription and illustration of manuscripts. The Sattras used to patronize and support the khanikar to work with their penmanship.

- The skilled and artistic penmanship of the scribes was so much on demand that one scribe usually specialized in the copying of one particular book instead of becoming a free-lancer in his profession. The skill of a painter was generally requisitioned to decorate the labors of penmanship. The scribe was sometimes a painter himself and, if not, a regular painter supplemented the work of the transcriber by sketches on spaces left vacant for that purpose.

F) Description:

The cultural heritage of Assam, the art of practicing manuscript painting using Sanchipat is going on since generations. Thus the centuries old paintings are still alive in fresh looking which is a most important quality of a painting or for any kind of art works of an artist. Beside the quality and selection of surface in the past, the selection of subject like religious and secular, and representation of the same thing in a visual form of painting for communicating with the illiterate and uneducated people of the past society of Assam. The traditional technical knowledge of the preparation of a quality surface of the painting and its aesthetical value in social, cultural, and religious heritage of Assam may inspire a whole younger generation of artists and art lovers in the future. Like the other painting traditions of India, the long tradition of manuscript paintings of Assam is also need to be counted as one of the mainstream of cultural heritage of India.

Manuscript paintings of Assam were a vibrant form of art since the 16th century. There are certain general features characterize manuscript painting of Majuli Assam. The pictorial format in Majuli paintings is usually of horizontal progression instead of rectangular isolation with which the Mughal artists worked.

In Assam the tradition of Painting mainly developed within the surface of manuscripts during the 16th century A.D. "It is known that the art was practiced in the satras, and in the courts of the Ahom-Koch kings under their patronage." The Vaisnava monasteries or institutions established by the great reformer of bhakti-movement Srimanta Sankardeva (1449- 1568 A.D.).

These Vaisnavite institutions are locally termed as Satra in Assam. In the Satra premises, different art activities had been practised such as writing, performing dance, drama, song, mask making, sculpture and painting for the propagation of Bhakti (devotion) and the message of Bhagavata among the people of Assam. One of the most significant features of the movement is the worship of religious scripture in the form of manuscript instead of any idol form. This bhakti movement gave birth to a culture of practicing the art of manuscript painting.

Among Satriya paintings, postures are angular and the faces are in strict profile except in case of a few figures. Emphasis on contour is also a characteristic feature.

The painters of Assamese Majuli paintings are emphasis given more to symmetry and movements of groups, which are dynamically presented. Perspective and the third dimension is nowhere in evidence.

Successive scenes are flatly brought on the same place like those in celluloid ribbons of cinematograph. Paintings are usually painted in arched or zigzag panels.

The background is usually monochrome red or at times, blue, grey or brown. The landscape is simple, consisting of blue sky, decorative trees; the water is treated in basket pattern.

Lyrical draughtmanship, simple composition, dramatic narration, and splendid colours give the Bhagavata illustrations a charm. Unlike brilliant pigments of the Satriya palette, palette of artists of the Ahom court was an extended one and was predominated more by mute and dark tones like mute greens or olive greens. Mauve, pink and grey were few other pigments, which enriched the colour palette.

The rise of Neo Vaisnavism under Sankaradeva, from 16th century onwards, the artists of majuli painting get a host of concrete examples that can be called painting in its real sense, that flourished until the last part of the 19th century.

These polychrome paintings, popularly known as manuscript painting, done on sanchipat or tulapat, which also contained written descriptions, have certain independent characteristics of their own and are collectively grouped as The Assam School of Painting.

The worship of scripture in the altar of each Satra enjoyed unprecedented impetus. The practice was also followed in the domestic chapel of each and every household in Assam. The reason behind the phenomenal growth of (painted) religious transcripts in innumerable number can alone be attributed to this practice.”

From the caritas, it is found that Sankaradeva was also a master painter possessing extensive knowledge about the nuances and aesthetics of the art of book illustration and painting. After he had finished writing his celebrated Gunamala, the Guru painted on tulāpāt, with vermillion and yellow arsenic, the picture of an elephant, and pasted it on the wooden book case in which the manuscript was placed.

This he did apparently to depict with the paint-brush the metaphor of 'elephant in a pot'. On another occasion. The painted sapta Vaikuntha (the seven Vaikunthas) on tulāpāt. Thus, it was the benign touch of the Guru which showed the way to the future artists of the Assam School of Painting.

The Subjects of the Paintings

The stories of the Bhagavata, the Puranas, the Ramayana, the Mahabharata and the epics were generally illustrated. When pictures could not be inserted, illuminated margins occasionally made up the deficiency.

Manuscripts with illustrated borders were known as latā-katā puthi or manuscripts with scrolls and running motifs along the borders. Many manuscripts contain pictures of the deadly sins, of the glory of Visnu, and of His incarnations according to Hindu conception.

Pictures of Sankaradeva sitting in a siksha-mudra posture and surrounded by his apostles are met with occasionally in his biographies eg, in the Vanamālidevar Carita and on the obverse of the first folio of the Guru Carit Kathā .

The earliest extant example of an illustrated manuscript of the Satriyā School is the Bhāgavata Book X (Dasama) (the Citra Bhāgavata) from the Bāli Satra of the Nagāon district. It is dated as 1539 AD. Though sharing some common features with the western India miniatures, it has an independent identity and Dr Moti Chandra lays down the following distinctive features of the said manuscript:

- Lyrical Draughtsmanship
- Simple Composition
- Dramatic Narration
- Splendid Color

Many more illustrated manuscripts covering three centuries including the 19th century have been recovered from different Satras and households of Assam during last seventy years or so. The pictorial idiom by and large remains the same with all these works, there are stylistic variations among the artists mainly due to individual comprehension of the text and the ability of the artist in matching the verbal imagery through a parallel pictorial imagery.

The Chitra Bhāgavata was followed by the execution of the illustrated Bar Kirtana of Kāthbāpu Satra, the Bhakti Ratnāvali executed in 1683 in Kamalābāri Satra, the Gita Govinda and the Ananda Lahari seem to have rendered by a sattriyā artist in the Ahom court of Rudra Singha (1695-1713 A.D.) and Siva Singha (1713-1744 A.D) (the Ananda-Lahari can be more precisely placed during 1720 A.D. & 1721 A.D), the Ajamilopākhyāna of Puranā Burkā Satra, the Bhāgavata VIII of Pubthariā, the Bhakti Ratnāvali of Ratnāvali-Thān in Nagāon and the dated copy of the third transcript of the Bhakti -Ratnāvali (1731 A.D) of Karatipār NaSatra in Nagaon. The artist of Bengenā-āti-Satra in Mājuli rendered paintings in the folios of Sundarakānda Rāmāyana in 1715 A.D.

In the same year, Visnurāma of Chalihā-Bāreghar Satra executed the paintings of the Ajamilopākhyāna Nāt written by the Satrādhikara, Srirāmadeva of the said Satra. Excluding the Bar-Kirtana, Sundarakānda, Ajamilopākhyāna Nāt, the other seven illustrated manuscripts stated above are stylistically similar and constitute one group from stylistic consideration.

One of the major contributions to the art of painting in Assam was the Lava Kusar Yuddha. The manuscript is undated. Its pictorial style is developed better than that of the Citra Bhāgavata and those executed between 1683 and 1732 A.D.

In 1836 the Ahom prince, Purandar Singha, whom the British company placed on the throne for a very short period after the fall of the Ahom kingdom during the Burmese aggression, commissioned the services of one Durgārām Betha for illumination work in the folios of the Brahmavaivarta Purāna (now in the British Library, London). It was a masterpiece of the 19th century.

Distinguishing features

The general composition and layout of the paintings are divided into two major sections. The background proper is always monochrome red free of any details.

The rest of the 'ālekhyā-sthāna' is painted in flat green on which the actual painting appears superimposed.

The most characteristic feature of these miniatures is that each human, animal or any other figure is framed by trifoil arches or 'architectural niches'. As a result, the top portion of the background is always of irregular shape, following the contour of the arch or series of arches if the panel is a longer one.

The entire area is never broken into foreground, background or horizon, either by changes in their respective colors or by the introduction of symbolic and significant motifs like grass, plants or clouds. The entire composition appears to be in eye level view.

Representations of pouring rain water, rivers and lakes are of a conventional type. Mountains look like cross sections of them as in a geological diagram. The lack of expression in the faces of human figures is simply compensated by their poses and mudrās which are greatly effective.

They are all in 'Abhanga', a few in 'Tribhanga' and almost none in 'Atibhanga' poses. In depicting an episode, parts of it are represented on the succeeding folios. But the technique of continued narration is also followed at times. No attempt to depict the sky in a realistic manner is perceptible. Where figures are inserted the background is invariably red but the area between the red background and the rest of the the alekhya-sthana is usually painted in equally flat monochrome green.

Vegetation though stylised is varied and the Kadamba, the Banana and other willowy trees with flowers are the most common types represented. The usual practice is to fill the crown area in some kind of green and then the leaves and the flowers are picked out in minute details. Cuckoos and other harmless beasts and birds inhabit these trees.

Human figures and superhuman beings in anthropomorphic forms are all characteristic of the school. In the case of human figures, natural proportions are adhered to but, when, in particular episodes Krishna's personality had to be magnified he is shown far larger in size.

Pictorial Depiction of the paintings

Through the study of the Bhagavata-Purana part-VI, it is found that the painting depicts the story of a Vedic Brahmin Ajamila. The painting expressed the incident occurred during and after the Ajamila's death. The departed body is tied up and trying to take under the custody of three Yamdutas (the messenger of the god of death) to punish him for his connection in bad activities during his life. In the same time, four Vishnuduta's (the messengers of Lord Vishnu) have appeared to give relief Ajamila from the Yamduta's. In this painting, there was a young child named Narayana had been placed in the middle section of this painting. According to the Ajamila-upakhyan, as mentioned in the Bhagavata-Purana part-VI, the boy has been identified as the youngest child of Ajamila. Ajamila's love and affection towards child Narayana are more than the other child. Hence, during departing to death, Ajamila speak loudly to call Narayana to come near to him. Narayana is another name of Lord Vishnu and for uttering the name he was rescued from Yamdutas by the four Vishnudutas. Ultimately, the painting shows a glory of the lord Vishnu.

In the second painting, there is a depiction of different vignette design particularly based on foliage. The artist had composed two distinct varieties of unknown flowers and leafs. Despite the fact, there is some resemblance has been observed between the portrayed flower and flower-bearing plants with the local flower and flower-bearing plants found in Assam

The third paintings of the book depicted a scene where the image of Vishnu has been portrayed seating in a simple cross-legged position with usual Sanka, Chakra, Gada, the Padma in his hands. The painting contained the posture of two standing male and two seated female figures. Naren Kalita opined that "the third miniature depicting a scene in Vaikuntha may be the work of another artist not a proficient as his counterpart who painted the other two miniatures. But no justification and identification have been made on the subject and object of the paintings.

Studying the Bhagavata-Purana chapter- XV of part-III, sloka (hymns) 27,28,33,34, the two same ages male figures with four hands in the painting can be identified as the illustrative image of Joy and Vijoy. They are the two of the attendants of Vaikunthanath as well as the gatekeeper of the abode of Visnu.

It has been found in chapter IX of part - VI particularly from the sloka number 29-30, that the lord Visnu having sixteen personal attendants with same visual appearances like Visnu and they are said to be the Demi God of Vaikuntha.

Their physical appearances have also been described in the sloka number 27 of chapter XV in part-III. Same appearances of this two male figures portrayed between the two arched doors claim to be the image of Joy and Vijoy. Similar appearances of the image of Joy and Vijoy have been found in Satriya wood carvings certainly on the doors of different Vaisnava Sattras and Namghars. As an example, such images of Joy and Vijoy have been represented on the doors of Patbausi and Ganakuchi Sattra of Barpeta district in Assam with mentioning their respective names.

It can be assumed that the depiction of the image of Joy and Vijoy on doors of Vaisnava monasteries is the idea taken from Puranas. The two seated female figure has been identified as the female attendant of Lord Visnu. Among the two female attendants, one has been portrayed in a knee-bending position in the lower right side of the image of Visnu with a pair of chowries in her hands.

In the verses 35-43 of Bhagavata-Purana chapter XV of part- III, the chowries (fly whisk) have been described as the bright wings of a swan used as a hand fan. But artist used simple yellow lines to depict the chowries in this painting. It has been studied that the chowrie (fly whisk) has been used as one of the important elements in Hindu and Buddhist religion. "The fly-whisk is evident in some configurations of the Astamangala, employed in some traditions of murti puja, particularly the Gaudiya Vaishnava".

The Gaudiya Vaisnavism is a Vaishnava religious movement inaugurated by Chaitanya Mahaprabhu (1486-1534) in the region of Gauda present day in Bangladesh with the same philosophy of worshipping Vishnu or Krishna and their many incarnations. But the basic source of idea of this movement is Bhagavata-Gita and Bhagavata-Purana same as the contemporary Bhakti movement of Sankardeva in Assam.

A medium locally called Tulapat made up by pressing cotton, Talpat (leaves of the palm tree), and Muga silk.

The use of Sanchipat as a surface of the painting was very more popular comparing to any other. The reason behind giving preference to this particular carrier may be depend on its maximum availability in the region.

Secondly the surface of the Sanchipat remains more durable and comfortable base for writing and painting. Another most important observation is that the colors used on the paintings were still glazing after many centuries of its execution; whereas there is no such modern techniques had been applied for their preservations.

To think about better longevity of any art works depends on the surface which every artist taking care of that. Similarly, the folio of Aloe bark as the surface of the paintings is much more significant so that the paintings were still existed brighter even after many centuries.

It can be assumed that the artists and scribes of that time used Sanchipat as a most preferable medium for their work. Another reason may also possible that the Sanchi wood or "agar wood and its essential oil gained great cultural and religious significance in ancient civilizations around the world, being mentioned throughout one of the world's oldest written texts – the Sanskrit Vedas from India."

'Agar wood powder and dust is used to make incense sticks or coils for indoor fragrance, and are used for religious purposes by Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus.' Point to the religious significance of this Aquilaria tree, the Vaishnava reformer may inspire from the Vedas and select the bark of aloe wood or Agar or Agaru tree as a medium of writing and painting in religious purpose.

It is also known that, Sankardeva the founder of the Vaishnava religious movement in Assam was a great scholar of Sanskrit and Assamese who studied most of the ancient scriptures of the Vedas, Epics, Grammar, Upanishad's and Puranas from where he might get the significant knowledge of agar tree and practically used it as a medium of communication in social-cultural practices.

So that, thousands of manuscript paintings had been done on Sanchipat to spread the knowledge of Hindu religious text in visual form and got popularity as a traditional painting into the Satriya culture of Assam.

The art of manuscript painting developed during the Bhakti- movement in Assam was known to be practiced in the Vaishnava monasteries and also under the patronage of Ahom and Koch kings of this North-Eastern region.

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Assam has a long tradition painting on the bark of Sanchi trees (Aquillaria Agallocha). The tradition flows between 15th to 18th centuries to achieve the recognition as Satriya School of painting. The earliest evidence of this art practice traced back to the time of 7th -century Kamrupa rulers of Assam.

Manuscript paintings of Assam were a vibrant form of art since the 16th century. In 1769 a section of Vaishnava devotees affiliated to Moamaria order in upper Assam revolted against the Ahom monarchy. This led to collapse of Ahom administration and resultant downfall of creative activities leading to emigration of some artists to different satras.

Although devastation caused by the rebellion stopped, the situation again turned violent after 1817 with successive acts of aggressions from the Burmese. The Treaty of Yandaboo in 1826 led to control of East India Company over the territory of Assam and this ended the 600 years old Ahom rule in Assam.

In the absence of patrons, there was a fall in the number of skilled artisans. Very few artists of satras kept the flame burning till early 20th century in spite of many hurdles that came their way.

Manuscript painting in Majuli is part of a rich cultural heritage of Assam and India. It grew during the medieval period through the institution of Satras. It was influenced by many painting forms and was used to preserve and spread knowledge through the satras and also in the wider society.

I) Method of Production:

The depiction of great Hindu epic stories from Ramayana, Mahabharata, Bhagavata- Purana, Kalki- Purana and a treatise on elephants have been portrayed upon the barks of Aquilaria or Agar tree. A long-lasting local made waterproof ink and colors from natural ingredients were used followed by an indigenous laborious process of their preparations. The use of Aquillaria tree bark for practicing painting had a significant role in visual communication for the socio-cultural and religious development in Assam.

These paintings are the most valuable resources to understanding and feel the pleasure of early art and cultural practices of the North-Eastern region of India. It is very important to recognize and generalize the valuable information about this rare and dying knowledge of fine art practice in today's art and research world which may influence and discover a new way of thinking and awareness for the artist and art historians

Manuscripts Painting: The Preparation Process -

When the Ahoms invaded Assam. The use of paper was unknown, and they employed instead strips of bark of the Sanchi tree known in Bengal as Agar (Aquilaria Agallocha).

- The manner of preparing the bark for use as a writing material is as follows: A tree is selected of about 15 or 16 years growth and 30 to 35 inches in girth, measured about 4 feet from the ground. From this the bark is removed in strips, from 6 to 18 feet long, and from 3 to 27 inches in breadth.
- These strips are rolled up separately with the inner or green part inside, and are dried in the sun for several days. They are then rubbed by hand on a board, or some other hard substance, so as to facilitate the removal of the outer or scaly portion of the bark. After this, they are exposed to the dew for one night.
- Next morning the outer layer of the bark (nikari) is carefully removed, and the bark proper is cut into pieces of a convenient size, 9 to 27 inches long and 3 to 18 inches broad.
- These are put in cold water for about an hour, and the alkali is extracted, after which the surface is scraped smooth with a knife. They are then dried in the sun for half an hour, and when perfectly dry, are rubbed with a piece of burnt brick.
- A paste prepared from matimah (Phaseolus radiatus) is next rubbed in, and the bark is dyed yellow by means of yellow arsenic. This is followed again by sun-drying, after which the strips are rubbed as smooth as marble.
- The process is now complete, and the strips are ready for use.
- The skill of preparing the bark and of inscribing the writing is considerable, and, apart from this, much greater value is attached to an old manuscript, or puthi, than to a new copy of it. These puthis are very carefully preserved, wrapped up in pieces of cloth, and are handed down as heirlooms from father to son.
- Tulapat is essentially a paper made from wood pulp. Three kinds of trees were normally selected for the purpose.
- White tulapat was made from the 'maiha' tree, the dark brown variety from the 'Yamon' and the red variety from a tree the name of which has not been found. The 'Yamon' tree has been identified with the 'hsa' of the Shan people and 'nuni' or paper mulberry in Assamese (Brosanettia Papyrifera).
- The barks of the above mentioned trees were cut up in convenient sizes and beaten thoroughly. This broke the fibres and separated and loosened them. Then these were boiled till they melted and formed into a fine pulp and became cleared of all impurities.
- The pulp was next poured over water kept in rectangular ditches of required sizes and it floated on the water's surface. It was then evenly spread all over with a scraper to the shape of the watery surface. Then it was left to cool. When cool, the film of pulp lying on the surface of the water gave a sheet of strong and tough paper.

- Usually, a tulapat folio was made by stitching two single sheets together or by folding a longer sheet in two and then stitching the same. This was done to give strength to the folios.
- Manuscript painting making is remarkable form of craftwork of Majuli that stand unique in entire India. In the olden days before paper was discovered and used on a huge scale, the religions leaders of the Sattras utilized the papers for writing. These were produced from the bark of the plants.
- They used naturally made ink prepared from the Keheraj stems.
- These were then coloured by natural colourants like Hengul and Haital. Several ancient manuscripts have been preserved in different Sattras.
- A pictorial manuscript Hosti Vidyamava written on elephant conservation has been preserved in Auniati Sattras.
- This traditional skill of manuscript making has been handed down from one generation to another and is presently practised by a group of enthusiastic and gifted craftsmen.

Process of Preparing the Sanchipat for Manuscript Painting -

The surface of the manuscript was made from the bark of Aquilaria agallocha or Sanchi tree, Agar tree or agar tree.

It is well known as Sanchipat in Assam. Preparation of the Sanchipat followed a lengthy and laborious process of curing, seasoning and polishing of the cut out piece of aloe bark – Sanchi tree.

Sanchi tree is categorized as 'Bhola Sanchi' and another is Jati Sanchi or Jatiya Sanchi. 'Out of two species of Sanchi tree, namely, Bhola Sanchi and jatiya Sanchi, the bark of the former is preferred for making sanchipat. 'The bark of jatiya Sanchi develops holes also as it is attacked by insects.' 'The bark of the Bhola Sanchi is smoother than that of Jatiya Sanchi' (so that, the smoother quality might become more preferable for the artists and scribes to make use the bark of Bhola Sanchi. It can be understood that the use of fine and flowing lines in the manuscript is possibly for the significant characteristic of the Bhola Sanchipat.

The traditional process of preparing the Sanchipat begins with a selection of fifteen to sixteen year edge Bhola Sanchi tree with thirty to thirty-five inch girth.

The selection of a specific Bhola Sanchi tree is quite important for getting smooth surface and flexibility during handling. So that's a piece of bark measuring six to eighteen foot length and three to twenty seven inches, width is needed to be taken out from a particular portion, which about four feet height from the earth's surface. Choosing of that particular portion may remain appropriate for the method which is going to be applied on it.

It is also possible that the thickness, quality and maturity of the fiber in that certain area is perfect for making a quality Sanchipat.

After removing a strip of bark, it has been rolled up keeping inner side outward. Thus, the white surface or the surface containing moisture may dry quickly when it is exposed to sunlight. Here two process of drying bark has been found. One is 'dried in the sun for several days' and another is 'used to smoke the rolls and then put them under water for a few days to soften'.

After that the outer rough or hard surface of the bark is to be rubbed by hand placing on hard board or wooden plank. The preferable tools applied for rubbing is pointed knife, or using iron rod containing fixation of sand and glass powder so called 'Jhao'.

After removing or rubbing the outermost surface, the bark is to be kept in dew for one night. In the morning the remaining part of the outer layer is to be taken out. Dew is an important factor to give minimum moisture and is quite appropriate for separating the remaining layer which is called as 'nikari' .

Then the bark is used to cut into pieces. The size of the pieces of bark is depending on the artist or Khanikar, and the type of works going to be done on it. The average sizes of the bark are from 22.86 to 68.58 cm long and 7.62 to 45.72 cm broad.

After getting the convenient sizes, the barks are placed in cold water for some time (approximately for an hour) So that the Alkali or slippery (Kash) substances are easily washed out from the bark. It is believed that, the sticky or alkali substances can cause damage to the colors and ink which is going to be applied on it. Sometime this wash out process is also done by boiling in a water solution made by mixing some natural ingredients.

The solution contains a mixture of ingredients such as 'Kani-bhi Guti (seed of Croton tiglium), leaves of Chalkunwari (Aloe barbadensis) and Tutia (blue vitriol, copper sulfate).

It is studied that the seed paste of Croton tiglium is significant as an Ayurvedic use 'for skin diseases, painful swellings and alopecia' .The washout Sanchi bark or alkali free Sanchi barks are also boiled in a solvent of Tutia and Methi (Fenugreek) so that the Sanchi bark become insect proof or insect resistance in the future and again the process of drying takes place for the evaporation of remaining moisture from the bark.

After absolute dry in front of sunlight, the bark used to be smoothened by rubbing a piece of burnt brick. The bark might possibly shrink during drying so that to avoid the shrinking some weight must be placed systematically upon that bark. This drying is followed by an application of Matimah (Vigna Mungo or black gram) paste on the surface of the bark and again dried in sunlight.

Then the dried Matimah surface is to be rubbed by a seed or conch shell (Sankha) for getting a smoothing surface. The seed is locally called as Ghila (sea bean, sea heart, Entada rheedei or Entada scandens) .

After smoothening, the bark is to be coated with a thin layer of Haital or Hangul. These two natural pigments are also the most common color pigments of the traditional color palates of the Sachipat paintings, where Haital used to get yellow and Hengul used for Red. Basically Haital and Hengul were appearing in solid form so that these ingredients were needed to be lightly powdered. Then this fine powder of Haital or Hengul mixing with water and gum is to be applied on the surface of the bark.

Here, the gum used is also erected from the natural ingredients like from outenga (Elephant apple), Bel (Stone apple) and Dhekia (Fiddlehead fern). This coat of Haital or Hengul is followed by again sun drying and rubbing with Ghila as a final touch for smoothing the bark.

Sometime the turmeric powder was also used to coat the bark beside the Haital and Hengul. He further said that, after drying the coat of Haital, Hengul or turmeric, the bark has to be rubbed by a smooth marble as a final touch to get slippery surface. That means, there was a variety of material used to make the surface shine and slippery.

Now, it can be assumed that, the artist and scribe only preferred the shiny and slippery surface for the application of ink and color.

Finally, after appropriate smoothing and shining, the bark is ready to use for manuscript painting. It is also known that the coat of Haital and Hengul can also protect the barks from various funguses.

Traditional writings In Manuscript Painting:

The writing of scripts on the bark of Sanchi or Tula pat had some specific rules -The writings were generally done from the reverse side of the leaf.

A margin on all four sides was left on both sides of each sheet and on the left side of each leaf numbers were given as identification. Hence on each and every paper there was a small central whole with some empty portions called salabindha (Nabhi).

Part of the word or sometimes part of the even letter or compound letters are found written separately in two lines.

In the manuscript there was no use of coma (,), semi-colon (;), note of interrogation (?), note of exclamation (!) or other marks as in its modern form. They would only use stop marks indicated by single line (I) or double lines (II) and also by colon (:) marks. Stress was practically on pronunciation and often the sense or meaning of the writing was determined from the manner of pronunciation. In case of a mistake they did not remove it from the paper.

- Sanchi or Tula pat: bark of this tree is used for writing the manuscripts.
- Homemade ink from Silikha (terminalia citrina), cow urine etc.,
- Matimah (Phaseous raditus): for preparing the base of Sachi leaves.
- Fibers from the fruit of the coconut tree: to make brush or pen for writing.
- Reeds, thin bamboo, peacock feathers used as pen.

Raw Materials, Tools and Making Process Linked with Culture

The manuscript leaves in Assam were made of two materials. Sanckipat or the thicker variety was made from the bark of Sad tree or aloes wood, Aquilaria agallocha.

The preparation entailed a laborious process of curing, seasoning and polishing the raw slices before the leaves could be made to retain the ink.

The materials used in painting are:

- Indigo
- Yellow ochre (geru māti)
- Hengul (vermillion) one of the chief components used
- Hāitāl (yellow arsenic) also one of the chief components
- Lamp-black

These materials could easily give the basic colors and even a few composite ones. The use of a crude variety of chalk (dhal) sometimes in the preparation of the painting surface in many cases accounts for the decay of the color of, and sometimes the paintings themselves

The details of the process of preparing Sanchupat have been given by Sir Edward Gait in an appendix to his History of Assam, The sizes of the leaves were of various dimension and thickness.

Big-sized leaves, measuring more or less six inches by two feet, were reserved generally for highly revered classics and scriptures, and for manuscripts prepared specially for the King and his nobles. The leaves were numbered, the figures being inserted at the second page of a folio.

The centre of each leaf was perforated for the fastening string to pass through. Leaves thicker than those used in the body of the manuscript were used for covers, and occasionally wooden pieces were also used.

There were always some spare leaves or pages to record changes of ownership, or other important events in the life of the owner or his family.

These additional leaves were known as Betupat, or attendant leaves. The whole manuscript was wrapped up again in a piece of cloth, or enclosed in a wooden box. These boxes, in the case of valuable manuscripts were coloured and painted, the pictures being generally appropriate to the subject-matter of the book itself.

Method Of Making - Preparation of base:

The tree of about 15 or 16 years' growth and 30 to 50 inches in girth measuring about 4 feet from the ground is selected. From this the bark is removed in strips which are 6 to 18 feet long and 3 to 27 inches wide. The strips are rolled up separately with the inner or white part inside and are dried in the sun for several days.

They are then rubbed by hand on a board or some other hard substance so as to facilitate the removal of the outer or scaly portion of the bark. After this they are exposed to the dew for one night.

Next morning the outer layer of the bark (nikari) is carefully removed, and the bark proper is cut into pieces of a convenient size varying between 9 to 27 inches in length and 3 to 18 inches in breadth.

These are put into cold water for about an hour and the alkali is extracted, after which the surface is scraped smooth with a knife. They are often dried in the sun for half an hour and when perfectly dry, are rubbed with a piece of burnt brick.

A paste prepared from the matimah (local pulse, Phaseous raditus) is then rubbed in and the bark is died yellow by means of yellow arsenic. This is followed again by sun drying, after which the strips are rubbed till they are smooth. The process is now complete and strips are ready for use.

Method of production with colors as Raw Materials

Introduction of different floral border design is common in every folio except one. The size of the volume has been measured 39.3 cm in length and 11 cm in breadth. The language of the manuscripts is Sanskrit.

Arrangement of design and composition of the painting First of all the artist has chosen a rectangular shape of space for the paintings The depicted figures placed vertically on the horizontal line or plane.

Graphically, the arrangement of figures drawings vertically on the horizontal planes shows stability and balanced in composition. There is an absence of perspective in the painting and application of flat colour as a background is remains as one of the character and style of Satriya manuscript paintings. The facial expression and movement of the body show the aggressive mental and physical characteristic of the individual Yamdutas.

The muscularity of the body of Yamdutas has been toned up by using a variety of parallel, cross and broken hatching, which visually creates gradations and shades on the body so that the figures appear with the aesthetic of mass and volume. The artist of this painting must be aware of the knowledge of tone, shade and hatching to express their aesthetic sense of vision or imagination to represent the aggressive character of Yamdutas.

Artist also used bold curve hatching line to show the toned or bulkiness of the muscles of certain areas of the body. The curl wavy high-top hairstyle, the handlebar moustache, large eyes, broad nose, dark brown colour of the body, lifting of eyebrows and overall movement of the body parts aesthetically represents the furious and aggressive nature of the Yamdutas.

On the other side, the figure of the Vishnudutas appeared with a normal facial expression which can be said as mild, soft, and pitying expression.

The Vishnudutas have been painted in a closing feet standing position with as usual four beautiful hands holding Conch, Lotus, Wheel (Chakra or discus) and Mace (Gada). The blue complexion and the iconographical representation of the Vishnu show that they are the four emissaries of Lord Vishnu.

The figures of the Brahmin Ajamila and the child Narayana have been depicted gracefully with brooding facial expression. The drawings of the feet's of depicted figures of Vishnudutas, Yamdutas, Ajamila and child Narayana are proportionally large. Compare to the feet of other figures, the feet of the Ajamila is quite large in proportion.

The artist used both thin bold lines in the painting. Particularly, the line used on the figure of Yamdutas is much thicker and bolder or harder than the lines used on the other figure drawings. The use of soft line and minimum use of cross, parallel and broken hatching in portraying the figure of Vishnudutas and Brahmins shows that they are the characters in the story of the painting with soft, mild, and godliness in nature with less muscularity and bulkiness in the body. It seems that the artist of this painting had tried to express not only the outer characteristic or the physical appearances of Puranic figures but also tried to express the nature of the individual personality with the use of different kind of lines, strokes and tones created through applying different type of hatching in the body.

The small figure of the child Narayana placed in the middle of the painting creating a centre of interest in the composition. Artist creates some movements in the composition through the eyes of the Yamdutas and others which focusing towards the Ajamila.

Beside this another movement can be viewed from the same angularity and direction of the feet of every human figure. Visually, this optical movement moving from right to left through the feet and from the feet connecting the direction of the eyes of the Yamdutas the movement comes back in the middle of the composition.

The appearance of movement in the composition is one of the most important principles of the design of this composition which will help the audiences visually to concentrate, focus or to keep the visualization within the painting. The second painted folio of this Bhagavata-Purana contained a composition of vignette designs in the whole folio.

Use of flower in Painting -

The foliages have been drawn in a systematic order of alternation. The alternate arrangement is followed by a repetition of the same style of foliages inside the arched shaped frame. All the flowers have been drawn with five petals instead of space remain for one more petals. It can be assumed that the Artist might have undoubtedly left to draw this one petal for the purpose of visualizing the sepal and receptacle part of the flowers.

Two kinds of the flower have been introduced by the artist to decorate the whole painting of the folio. The basic colour of the flowers is red and white and green on the stem and leaf respectively which are contrasting with the yellow and red colour of the background. It is not certain to say that what types of flower and flowering plants that artist has tried to represent. The characteristic of the portrayed white flower (Fig.7) in the painting is somewhat close to the local "Nahor phol (Mesua ferrea or Ceylon Ironwood)"<sup>7</sup> of Assam and the red flower bears a resemblance to local "Dumboli or Bombax Ceiba"<sup>8</sup> or flowers of silk cotton tree.

To maintain a balance and systematic order, the artist has incorporated two types of arch shape inside a rectangular shape. The arch shapes have been classified as round or semicircular arch and ogee arch.

Designs and Motifs

The representation of arches with different floral designs in the painting may remind us of the style of alternative use of floral design in the wall of Hindu temples and in the Mughal art and architectures of India. As an example, such type of alternation of floral motifs had been used in the Mughal miniature paintings as well as in the arches and in the wall of Mughal architectures like Tajmahal. It may be possible that the artist of this Bhagavata painting might get influence from the contemporary Mughal style of paintings.

Relating to the depicted painting of Vaikuntha, it has been observed that every object of the paintings particularly the image of Joy, Vijay, Lord Vishnu and the two female attendants have been portrayed using bold lines. The frontal image of Lord Vishnu placed in the middle of the composition creates a visual attention and interest in the centre of the depicted painting. Similarly, the physical movement of the portrayed eyes and other body parts of the male and female attendants toward the Lord Vishnu also generate a visual or optical movement within the composition.

Some unnatural movements of the foot and fingers have been observed in the figure drawings but the artist had maintained a balanced proportion in the depicted figures. Artist has introduced different types of the arch like architectural structure to frame out the individual male and female figures in the painting. These architectural arch frames can be classified as round, segmental and Multi-foil.

The systematic distribution of this architectural frame in the painting significantly balanced the composition of the painting.

It is very interesting to notice that the portraying divine figure inside the different arched frame in the temple architecture and the style of representing the door and window in a round, segmental and multifoil remained a stylistic feature in the ancient and medieval tradition of architecture in Assam.

Preparation of ink:

The ink is prepared mainly from silikha plant. A few fruits of similar variety may also be used to prepare ink. Fruits are kept in an earthen bowl filled with water for few days. The bowl in turn is kept in a non porous basin for a few nights.

After a few days, the water turns black and percolates through earthen bowl and gets collected in the non porous bowl. Iron Sulphate or blood of Kusiya (local variety of fish) may also be added to this ink.

. It is also water proof and does not fade even after long exposure. Traditionally only a dark reddish color or hengul haital was used in the manuscripts.

Among the other colors used in Assamese miniatures are the hengaul (Vermillion red), haital (yellow arsenic yellow), kharimati or dhabal (for white) and golden color (either from gold or through mixing red, yellow with La chaloa). Fibers from the fruit of the coconut tree are used for making brushes.

Classification of colours for the Manuscript paintings

Red: Red is one of most common colour in the traditional colour palette of manuscript painting in Assam. The source of this Red colour is the natural ingredient Hengul or Hingul. This shade of red may be considered as a dark vermilion or can be classified or assumed as red-orange or the colour between scarlet to brick-red.

There is a variety of red colour used to be found and observed in the manuscript paintings of Assam. But it is not much known that how the different variations of red colour had been produced by the artist. It has been studied that in the tradition of manuscript painting in Assam "Lac dye or Alta was used to obtain a deep and rich red".

Yellow: The yellow of Haital or Harital is another most important colour of the traditional colour palates of manuscript painting in Assam. There is an application of a variety of yellow colour in all the three paintings and in the decorated floral border designs in every folio can be observed. It can be said as yellow with high, medium and low intensity or luminosity in character and farther can be classified as the colour between highlighted or bright yellow to dark as yellow ochre.

Such as the yellow of the lower garments of the first two Yamdutas from the left side can be classified as yellow with high brilliancy compare to yellow used on the garments of third imageries of Yamduta.

Besides the use of tint colour of yellow, the artist had also used another variety of yellow to depict the skin complexion of the images of Ajamila & Narayana of the first Painting and on the images of Joy, Bijoy and two ladies of the third paintings which can be classified as reddish-yellow in a combination of white.

These varieties of yellow used and distributed in the paintings are much more contrasting and highlighted part of the painting then the other distributed colours. There are many variations of yellow have been used by the artist in the paintings of Bhagavata-Purana book.

Brown: The colour has been classified as a dark shade of brown colour .The Artist possibly obtained this dark brown colour by mixing desire amount of natural Black or lamp black, with the red of Haital and little yellow of Hengul. This dark-brown colour has been specifically used to get the desire aesthetic value of dark skin complexion of the three Yamdutas only.

Moreover there is a much variation in using green colour has been observed in the decorative designs of different foliages and also used in decorating the Puthinabhi. Darker and lighter variation of green has been used to paint leafs of the flower bearing plants.

Though the dark green comes into view with more contrast against the yellow colour of the background whereas the light green leafs with yellow outline and modelings appears less prominent and contrast against the red of the background.

Another variation of green colour has been used in the folio contain a picture of Vaikuntha scene. It is a type of green may be obtained by the combination of desire amount of Green and black and it has been identified as a blackish-green.

This blackish green is prominently used flat in the rectangular border or margin around the painting. This blackish-green is also used to depict the steps in the lower middle part of the composition upon which the seated image of Vishnu has been portrayed.

It has been observed that the use of blackish-green has high up the weight of composition in the lower middle part and much more contrasting with the other red, yellow, white and blue colour of the painting. The application of much more dark green colour in the lower middle does not cause any visual interruption in balancing the composition.

Blue: The use of blue colour is less in the paintings. Blue is used to depict the skin complexion of the seated image of Vishnu and on the three Vishnu imageries. Though both the blue colour complexion is not same and appears with a variation of lightness.

Particularly the bluish complexions of the three imageries are lighter than that of the seated image of Vishnu in the other folio. Some tonal effect of blue has been observed on the skin complexion of three imageries where as the blue of the seated image of Vishnu appears flat and deep. Another variation has been observed in the Puthi-nabhi design which appears like greenish blue.

The application of blue and its variation is quite minimal compared to other colours. Variation like grayish-blue is also observed in the marginal or border floral design in some folios and particularly used to paint leafs.

White is applied on the upper garments (dupatta) of the four Vishnu imageries which help to highlight the placement of four godly forms in the arrangement of the composition. The white with same intensity have been distributed on the large eyes and teeth's of the three Yamduttas.

White is also used to represent the hand tying ropes of Ajamila. This selective area of white appears most contrasting and highlighted parts of the painting. Similarly, the white used on the painting based on only foliage particularly on the depiction of flowers is also appears with a quality of contrast among the other distributed colour. Repetitive and alternative distribution of white creates a visual concentration in between painting. Basically white is used to depict the petals and core part of the flowers.

Black: Black is the most significant colour in the paintings of the Bhagavata, Volume VI-VII. The artist might be used black, red, yellow to made dark brown colour which is the skin colour complexion of the three Yamduttas.

The bulkiness of the muscles of three Yamduttas has been visualized by using black colour. The wavy hair, toned muscles, large moustaches, eyebrows, weapons like Gada (mace) has been depicted in black. As usual Black is specific in use to represent the colour of the hair of all the male and female figures of the individual paintings.

Moreover black is used in outlining the maximum objects in the composition such as different body parts of the image of Vishnu, green garland, architectural chambers, garments, ornaments and on the border floral designs.

Special storage area called Gandhiya Bharal

Traditionally, a special storage area called gandhiya bharal was allocated for keeping the manuscripts. Presently, a dedicated space as storage area for manuscripts is located within the Sattras.

J) Uniqueness:

The Manuscript paintings in Majuli and nearby districts in Assam represent different stylistic features of the early and contemporary art of Assam and other painting schools of India such as the introduction of floral decorative border design around the paintings and inside architectural arch frames which also remained as one of the important stylistic features.

- In the present time of globalization, these manuscript paintings represent the Vaishnavite culture of traditional art practice of 18th century Assam as well represent the culture of painting in North-East India.
- The Assamese manuscript paintings have been a vibrant form of painting and were given a definite shape during the bhakti movement by saint sankaradeva in the 15th century.
- The art of manuscript writing is continuing in each Sattra of Majuli Island. It is one of the prime concerns and responsibilities of the Sattras to train and educate the younger generation of the Bhaktas.
- Proficient Bhaktas are trained under the supervision of the masters of the Sattra. Hence, the Sattras act as main centers for the promotion of traditional form of manuscript writing and painting in its original form.
- Over 150 illustrated manuscripts have been discovered in Assam till date.
- Silikha trees are also located along the many pathways on the island.
- Requirement of materials for manuscript writing at the Majuli Island is fulfilled at the local level.
- The different styles of Assamese Manuscript Painting Tradition are Sattriya, Gadgayan, Darrangi and the Tai style.
- The manuscript paintings consist of religious illustrations from the Hindu mythology.
- There are secular manuscripts as well, such as the buranjis, or the manuscripts on chronicles of kings.
- There are remarkable abstractions here: visual statements about the incomprehensible. They occur in manuscript after manuscript painted — a local innovation, again — not on paper but on sanchi pat: folios made from the inner bark of the aloe tree (aquilaria agallocha). But no two renderings of the Meru are exactly alike, the imagination of different painters leading them along different paths.
- Required material for manuscript writing is locally available. Plant species like Sanchi or aloe tree and Silikha are used for preparing base for writing, ink and color respectively.
- These species grow naturally on the island. The climate and soil condition in Majuli supports their growth.
- Within the Sattra complex, Sanchi trees are planted by the Bhaktas near the Hatis and the maintenance of these trees is also their responsibility.
- The natural colours red, yellow, blue, white and black are used in the paintings.
- The most appreciable and significant characteristic is the traditional process and the use of natural ingredients as a medium of paintings so that the paintings were still looking fresh even after 232 years of its execution.
- It is most important for any artist to be conscious about longevity and durability of his/her creations so that the next generation of artist and art lovers can get the knowledge, influence and be aware of the existence of past art and culture of a region.
- Traditionally these were drawn on the bark of agar (sanchipat), hand made paper pulp (tulapat), wooden plate and on muga clothes.

- The artist has maintained the local stylistic features of the composition of both object and subjects against the flat red and yellow colour background of the Satriya style of paintings. The paintings give the visual representation of the divine beings of Hinduism.
- Through these paintings, artists have represented different elements, principle and techniques and their way of traditional arrangements. The paintings give the visual representation of the stories related to Lord Vishnu.
- The artists have introduced his skill and aesthetic sense of vision by arranging different elements of art and principle in a system of repetition and alternation which high up the beauty of the thoughts of Bhagavata-Purana in visual form.

Recognition at Global level from Assam – A Land of Culture and Heritage

Assam, one of the states of Northeast India, has a unique and valuable cultural heritage. In Assam, the tradition of art, painting, sculpture, architect etc. had been practiced since ancient times. The art of writing and painting were found prevalent during the reign of the king Bhaskarvarma (595-650 B.C.).

According to Puranas, Chitrlekha the friend of King Bana's daughter Usha, was known as an expert in art and painting. The tradition of pictorial book was found in the Harshacharit of Banabhatta. During the Bhakti Movement led by Shankardeva and Madhavdeva, the pictorial books played a significant role. It was found in the Charit puthis that Shankardeva was very expert in art and paintings. Shankardeva had drawn the paintings of Chihnayatra, the first Bhaona in Assamese language himself. The ancient pictorial books are different from the traditional Indian art and paintings. The structure of face was cut parallel in shape and the use of colours given according to the characters which characterized these paintings. Nearly 3000 manuscripts are preserved in the Sattras, village Naamghar and house-holders of the Majuli Island.

Ambaji is famous for its white marble with the maximum whiteness in the range of 95.80 - 96.30%. The white marble of Ambaji constitutes Silicon Oxide, Calcium oxide, Magnesium Oxide, Iron Oxide, Aluminium Oxide, Calcium Oxide and mainly Calcium Carbonate .

The inherent qualities of the Ambaji White Marble can be summed up by uniform and closely packed fine grains hence becoming the grounds of their quality and classifications, unlike the other stone compositions, where the grains and their composition vary. Ambaji white marble is highly polishable, and relatively hard when compared to other varieties of marble found in India.

Ambaji White Marble is translucent, can be polished to high gloss, and is relatively hard when compared to other varieties of marble found in India and these are the main reason that Ambaji white marble is used in Indian temple architecture and stone sculpture carving.

Due to Ambaji White Marble's structural strength, it was a natural and it is still a natural choice to build temples in the region. Often referred to as "Lace – Like", minute, intricate, delicate, and deep carvings can be achieved in temples, statues, artifacts, and handicrafts made from Ambaji White Marble

F) Description:

Ambaji, which is a famous pilgrimage of Gujarat, is popular for its White Marble. Ambaji white marble is relatively hard compared to other varieties of marble found in India. Ambaji white marbles composition constitutes Silicon Oxide, Calcium oxide, Magnesium Oxide, Iron Oxide, Aluminium Oxide, Calcium Oxide and Calcium Carbonate, wherein Calcium Carbonate is found in the range of 93.00 - 97.0% which is comparatively higher than the other marble varieties found in India. The Ambaji Marble grains are of uniform size and closely packed. Ambaji white marble is highly polishable while being structurally strong, and thus provides a shiny texture.

The White Marble of Ambaji is formed when limestone is re-crystallized under the earth's crust due to intense pressure and heat. In this process, coarse carbonate minerals and large grains of calcite are formed from Limestone (Patel, N. (2010). Stone Buildings of Gujarat. India: SID Research Cell, Faculty of Design, CEPT University. Pg.18.).

The White Marble of Ambaji is a Metamorphic Stone that comes with minor veins of dark green or black which indicate a layer of foreign material or impurities, which get embedded while the stone was being formed. The stone is derived from either limestone or dolomite. The stone is hard, yet its component mineral is soft.

The marble of the area is compact and free from the fractured zone. Marble in the area is blockable and blocks are prepared with the help of wire saws, hence no blasting is undertaken for the mining of marble blocks/ rubbles.

Geographical area of the District

The district can be divided into three main parts – the hilly- mountainous region having high relief and rugged topography covering parts of Dhanera, Palanpur, Vadgaon, and the entire Danta Taluka in the east, the piedmont zone all along the periphery of hilly area, and region on the west and southwest of River Banas, which comprises flat plain with occasional undulations giving rise to sand dunes and mounds in the west. The western extension of this plain merges into the marshy area of Ran of Kachchh. Geomorphologically, the district is divided into six sub-micro-regions based on physiography, climate, geology, soils, and natural vegetation, and are:

- a) VAV SANDY PLAIN: It is mostly sandy plain with an altitude of 100 m above mean sea level. There are a few small channels, which merge into little Ran of Kachchh. The soil structure is composed of alluvium, blown sand, etc.
- b) SANDY PLAIN: The region mainly extends over the north and north-western parts of the district bound by the state of Rajasthan in the north, Banas Valley in the east and south, and Vav sandy plain in the west. The region has a slope gradient, towards the west in which the river Sukal flows.
- c) BANAS VALLEY: This region extends over the central and southwestern parts of the district. It is mainly formed by the Banas River which flows south-westerly direction and ultimately merges into Ran of Kachchh. The northern part of this region has high elevation than the south and western portions.
- d) BANASKANTHA ARAVALLI RANGE: The region spreads over the eastern part of Banaskantha district, occupying Danta, part of Palanpur, and a small area of Vadgaon Talukas. It is bound by the state of Rajasthan from the north, Banas Valley from the west, Mehsana district from the south, and Sabarkantha district from the east. This region is highly elevated, ranging between 100 and 300 m above mean sea level.
- e) JESSORE CHHOTILA HILLS: The region lies in Dhanera and Palanpur Taluka's and is enclosed by the state of Rajasthan from three sides while the Banaskantha Aravalli range makes its limit in the south. The area can be assigned as a disruption in part of the Aravali Range caused by the Banas Valley. It is an undulating terrain with an elevation of 300 m above mean sea level and is covered by forest.
- f) UMARDASI – SARAWATI PLAIN: This region mainly extends over the southeastern part of Banaskantha district covering the Taluka's of Palanpur and Vadgaon. It is bound by Banas Valley in the west and north, the Banaskantha Aravali range in the east, and the Mehsana district in the south. This region is formed by the Umardasi and Saraswati Rivers and has an elevation of 100 m above mean sea level. This region lies on the border of the Banaskantha District and Sirohi District, near Abu Road in the North on the Rajasthan State Border.

Ambaji Marble is excavated from the mines lying in the Latitude: 24.3310079 and Longitude: 72.8516471 and Tehsil/ Taluka: Danta, District Banaskantha, Gujarat, India

H) Proof of Origin (Historical records):

Marble is defined as a metamorphosed limestone that is produced by recrystallization and transformation of carbonate stones under thermal conditions and also regional metamorphism. In commercial terms, all calcareous rocks which are capable of polish are classed as marbles. Also, serpentine rocks, which contain small amounts of calcium or magnesium carbonates, and are capable of taking and retaining good polish are classed as marbles. Further, calcareous stones like onyx, travertine, and some limestones have also been classed as marbles.

The term "marble" is derived from the Latin word "Murmur" which has been coined from the Greek word "Marmorous", which means shining stone. Marble is famous for its uniform texture, availability of a variety of colors, hardness, amenability to be quarried into big blocks, and smooth, and shiny polished surface. Marble has gained attention among other dimension stones because of its aesthetics.

Marble has a huge demand and has always remained high and in recent times, its production has increased due to its import across the world and technological advances in its exactions and processing. Indian marbles hold 7th rank in the world for its export across the world.

The Banaskantha district takes its name from the river Banas, which flows through the region. The district is situated in the north-western part of the state and lies between north latitudes 23°33' and 24°25', and east longitude 71°07' and 73°02'. It has an area of 10,303 sq. km and is bounded by the state of Rajasthan in the north, Rann of Kachchh in the west, by Sabarkantha, Mahesana, and Patan districts in the east, south, and southwest respectively.

Ambaji is a village which is located in Danta Taluka in Banaskantha District of Gujarat State. The village is situated on the border of the States of Gujarat and Rajasthan. Ambaji village in. Ambaji village is located near the origin of the river Saraswati, on the hills of Arasur Parvat in Ambica forest towards the south-west side to old hills of Aravalli, at the altitude of about 480 meters, at about 1600 feet high from sea level, with 8.33 sq km area as a whole.

Ambaji is surrounded by Abu Road Taluka of Rajasthan towards the north, Amirgadh Taluka towards the west, and Khedbrahma Taluka towards the South. The administrative headquarters of the district is at Palanpur which is the largest city in the region. The district is situated between 23.33 to 24.45 north latitude and 72.15 to 73.87 east longitude. The district is located in the Northeast of Gujarat and is presumably named after the West Banas River which runs through the valley between Mount Abu and Aravalli Range, flowing to the plains of Gujarat in this region and towards the Rann of Kachchh. The district is famous for the Ambaji temple which draws many devotees, pilgrims, and tourists. Marble present in this area is a thick zone running along almost Northwest Southeast and dipping 70° due Southwest. The width of the mineralized zone is about 120m.

The present-day region of Ambaji is a cradle and confluence of two major religions of Hinduism and Jainism. The earliest archeological evidence proves that some of the Jain temples from the precinct at Kumbhariya carved and made out of white marble predate the Jain temples of Mt. Abu, Ranakpur, and Osian, despite their popularity.

The earliest historical text indicates Ambaji and Kumbhariya to be known as Arasana/ Arasana or Arasanakara with the suffix "akara" denoting a quarry. Similarly, the term "arasa" in Gujarati denotes marble quarried locally from local hills known as "Arasur". In addition, there is relevant data compilation that reveals that the same white marble from Ambaji was used in the construction and carving of famous Dilwara temples in present-day Rajasthan.

I) Method of Production:

Marble quarry of Banaskantha is a mechanized mine. Marble found in this area is a thick zone running along the Northwest Southeast and dipping 70° due Southwest. The width of the mineralized zone is about 120 m. Marble is available below the soil cover or on the surface, but the marble present on the surface is highly fractured at the top, and the intensity of fractures and cracks reduces as depth increases. Clay/ Epidotic are present as overburden rock. In general, blockable marble is present below 10-35 m from the surface. Overburden is removed by excavating the same with the help of heavy earth-moving machinery i.e., excavator, dumpers, etc. with the formation of benches. Blockable marble is produced from the bottom of the pit and below the fractured zone from the area. A few benches of blockable marble have been also developed.

As the thickness of overburden is less and blockable marble is available in the area just below the fractured limestone/ O.B. then the open cast mining method is followed, wherein one large size and one small pit are made in the area. The dimension of the larger pit size is about 422 m in length and width between 50 m to 180 m. (av. Width 150 m) and smaller pit, which lies in the eastern part of the lease area of size 120 m in length and width varying between 45 m to 60 m. For systematic development, it is proposed that mining be undertaken in a major part of the lease area.

Proposed Method of Mining During Modified Mining Scheme Period:

In the past, the mines were being worked by the opencast method of mining. But in the year 2019-2020 underground mining of marble commenced in addition to opencast mining. On the Southwestern side of the mining pit, reserves of marble are present, which lay under huge overburden. To extract these reserves there were two options: either remove the overburden and continue with conventional opencast mining or adopt underground mining. But with due time, high overburden, and due to close boundary; mining at depth by the opencast method was not found suitable. Hence in this area, underground mining of marble started in the year 2019-2020. In this Scheme of Mining, it is proposed to mine the marble using a combination of both opencast and underground methods of mining.

To extract these reserves for the production of Ambaji White Marbles there were two options/methods: either remove the overburden and continue with conventional opencast mining or adopt underground mining.

a. Opencast Mining:

Marble deposits is being worked by the opencast method of mining since 1949. With this method, mine can reach a depth of up to 110 m from the original surface.

In this method, overburden is first removed by excavating the same with the help of heavy earth-moving machinery i.e., excavator, dumpers, etc. with the formation of benches.

The side of the pit usually have almost vertical side wall. This part of the deposit cannot be worked by the opencast method of mining due to the huge quantity of overlying waste, to extract marble from this part of the deposit by underground method of mining. Horizontal openings were proposed in the side wall of the existing pit.

A major part of the lease area continued to be mined systematically by the opencast method of mining during the proposed scheme of mining. For this purpose, a proper bench has been developed. The maximum height of the bench is kept at 10 m. Overburden is removed with the help of an excavator and transported using dumpers. After the removal of O.B., marble is produced with the help of drilling machines, wire saws, cranes, etc. These blocks are then further dressed and cut to give proper shape and size. The finished blocks of marbles and rubbles are loaded into trucks for onward dispatch and processing.

- i. Removal of O.B. with the help of excavators.
- ii. Cuts on the Quarry front.
- iii. Overturning the benches/big blocks.
- iv. Sectioning, squaring, and dressing of blocks into small transportable blocks.

The above phases (except one) of work are done by wire saw cutting machine with the help of a rock drill machine and compressor. The loading of marble blocks and waste is done by cranes and excavators. Transportation of blocks rubbles and waste are carried out by dumpers and the waste rock/ O.B. are dumped within the lease area or on site approved by the Govt.

Marble is produced from one or more benches during the mining scheme period and from all section line areas. The recovery factor of marble blocks and rubble is an 80:20 ratio of ROM.

Salient Features of the Proposed Method of Working:

The proposed method is mechanized mining with the help of diamond wire saws and chain saws. The work is proposed from surface to bottom in descending order. The maximum height of the benches is kept at 10 m and the width of the bench is also kept at 10 m (minimum). For the same, the main phase of marble mining is described as follows:

- i. Removal of O.B. with the help of excavators.
- ii. Cuts on the Quarry front.
- iii. Overturning the benches/big blocks.
- iv. Sectioning, squaring, and dressing of blocks into small transportable blocks.

Underground Mining Method

Opencast mining can continue till reaching the lowest elevation of 342RL, at which it is presumed that enough space will be available for the movement of equipment. The area proposed to be mined by underground method of mining, is required to have removal of overlying overburden. It is proposed to mine by room and pillar mining method. Mining plans, proposals will be considered for mining at lower levels, once the geotechnical studies are completed.

In the past, the mines were being worked by the opencast method of mining. But with due time, high overburden, and due to close boundary; mining at depth by the opencast method was not found suitable.

Drilling and blasting are not proposed in underground mining operations. Marble rocks are cut using chain saws and wire saw machines.

1. Size of the cut is 5m(h), 12m(w) 3.2m(d), with two intermediate horizontal and three vertical cuts and are made by chain saw.
2. Back cuts for the block are made by using a wire saw machine.

The above phases of work are done by wire saw cutting machine with the help of a rock drill machine and compressor. The loading of marble blocks and waste is done by cranes and excavators. Transportation of blocks rubbles and waste are carried out by dumpers and the waste rock/ O.B. are dumped within the lease area or on site approved by the Govt.

Drilling and Blasting:

The overburden is fractured, jointed, and weathered, which can be removed by heavy earth-moving machinery i.e., excavators. In some places drilling and blasting are required. Controlled blasting is carried out using low-density explosives i.e., ANFO. Holes of 1.5 m depth of 32mm diameter are drilled and blasted. Whenever required it is done on a contract basis by a qualified blaster under MMR 1961. All precautionary measures as required under MMR 1961 are also strictly adhered to.

The marble of the area is compact and free from the fractured zone. Marble in the area is blockable and blocks are prepared with the help of wire saws, hence no blasting is undertaken for the mining of marble blocks/ rubbles.

Drilling and blasting are not proposed in underground mining operations. Marble rocks are cut using chain saws and wire saw machines.

1. Size of the cut is 5m(h), 12m(w) 3.2m(d), with two intermediate horizontal and three vertical cuts and are made by chain saw.
2. Back cuts for the block are made by using a wire saw machine.

Extent of Mechanization:

As mentioned earlier, this is a highly developed and mechanized mine that produces marble blocks and rubbles in good quantity. For the proper development of the lease area, the removal of overburden has been carried out by deploying excavators and dumpers of different make and capacities are deployed. For drilling work, air compressors and drill machines are used. For the production of marble blocks and rubble, mobile crane, fixed crane, chain saw, JCB Hyd., power jack, dressing machine, etc. are used.

The leaseholder maintains a well-equipped workshop where a lathe machine, milling machine, shaping machine, drill machine, power hack saw, welding machine, etc. are installed. Though electric power supply is available in the area, the leaseholder has diesel generator sets. Besides the above leaseholders have also has other allied machinery required for smooth running and functioning of the mine. The leaseholder also owns and utilizes hydraulic jacks, line drill machines, etc. Overburden is transported to O.B. dump yard in dumpers. The blockable and rubble marble are transported to various factories located in nearby industrial areas and other distant areas through hired trucks. The leaseholders are required to follow rule 21 (3) I of MDCR -2002 for the deployment of machinery and equipment.

Surface Transport:

Overburden is transported to the O.B. dump yard in dumpers and is continuing to be dumped at the existing dump site. The blockable marble is transported to various factories and processing units located in Gujarat and other states by hired trucks, and sub-grade material rubbles are dispatched to local small cutters units in hired trucks.

The layout of Mines:

Mining is planned by laying benches to a maximum of 10m height. The width of the benches will also keep 10 m minimum.

Bore holes are drilled in the hanging wall area and pit bottom of the deposit to prove depth extension and nature of the marble which is present in the depth.

Excavation:

Mining is done using chain saws, wire saws, and front loader which is suitable for underground use. chain saw machine, local make wire saw, and front loader is used initially, to cut of 5 m height, 12 m width, and 3.2 m depth are made on all four sides with chain saws. Two intermediate horizontal and three vertical cuts are also made. Back cuts are made by using wire saws and the blocks are removed using a front loader. The cutting speed of this chain saw machine is about 4 sq.m. per hour.

Recovery of ROM:

The recovery of blockable marble is 80% and 20% of rubble. The recovery percentage changes from place to place and layer to layer. However, in underground mining the block recovery is anticipated at around 95%.

Disposal of Waste:

This overburden will be dumped within the lease area and at an approved location outside the lease area. The location of dumping of O.B. is to be approved by Govt. officials and concerned departments. The size of the O.B. yard will be about 800 m X 200 m. and the height of the O.B. dump yard will be about 20 m or so. No mechanical means of transportation for men is envisaged. Material i.e., marble blocks will be transported out of the pit in own / hired trucks. Any waste will be transported using dumpers to the waste dump yard. The leaseholders have enough equipment, presently in use in the opencast mine and the same will be used.

Backfilling of Voids:

There is no proposal for backfilling of the void created by mining due to the unavailability of waste rock to fill in and also due to the continuity of mineralization in depth.

Surface Subsidence:

Openings in the pit side wall are created at a depth of approximately 100-110 m below surface level. No subsidence is anticipated at this stage.

Reclamation and Rehabilitation:*Afforestation:

The miners follow afforestation under area covered under the plantation program. This plantation will be carried out over the lease boundary and outside the lease area. Currently, there are a few trees/ plants in the area, and out of these plants, most of the trees/ plants belong to native species that naturally grow in the area. Besides the local trees, it is proposed to plant Mango, Neem, Kikar, and other fruit plants in the area.

Post Mining Land Use:

It is proposed that no part of the area will be backfilled. Marble available in the lease area will also be extracted in the future. However, at the end of the life of the mine area, it will be used as a water reservoir and the pit boundary to be protected by a strong parapet wall, to prevent the fall of stray animals. Proper ramps at places to be provided for easy access to stored water. Around the area, the proper plantation can be carried out and the mined-out area can be used as a scenic tourist spot in the future.

Safety Features:

The following safety measures are adhered to:

- a) The parapet wall on the side of the road.
- b) Adequate waiting points along the haul road.
- c) The proper gradient is being maintained.
- d) Preventive maintenance of transport vehicles.

J) Uniqueness:

Ambaji White Marble which is found and mined since early medieval period from Ambaji of Danta Taluka, Dist. Banaskantha, Gujarat is the most popular marble across the country.

The inherent qualities of the Ambaji White Marble can be summed up by uniform and closely packed fine grains hence becoming the grounds of their quality and classifications. Ambaji White Marble is translucent, can be polished to high gloss, and is relatively hard when compared to other varieties of marble found in India and these are the main reason that Ambaji white marble is used in Indian temple architecture and stone sculpture carving.

Likewise, the relative hardness of the Ambaji white marble has enabled the traditional stone carvers, as exemplified in the various Jain temples from the medieval period, to carve exquisite details at the minutest of scale and the same intricacy can be witnessed in the artifacts, and handicrafts from the region carved in Ambaji White Marble.

Ambaji is famous for its white marble with the maximum whiteness in the range of 95.80 - 96.30%. The white marble of Ambaji constitutes Silicon Oxide, Calcium oxide, Magnesium Oxide, Iron Oxide, Aluminium Oxide, and mainly Calcium Oxide.

Composition Percentage of Ambaji White Marble Constituents

Constituent	Percentage
SiO <sub>2</sub>	1.12 - 3.23%
CaO	52.24 – 54.32 %

MgO	0.80- 1.60 %
Fe <sub>2</sub> O <sub>3</sub>	0.09 – 0.15%
Al <sub>2</sub> O <sub>3</sub>	0.15 – 0.22 %
LOI	42.60- 43.60%
CaCo <sub>3</sub>	93.00 - 97.0%
Brightness	94.50 %
Whiteness	95.80 - 96.30%

Due to Amabji White Marble's structural strength, it was a natural and it is still a natural choice to build medieval temples in the region. Often referred to as "Lace – Like", minute, intricate, delicate, and deep carvings can be achieved in temples, statues, artifacts, and handicrafts made from Ambaji White Marble

THE REGISTRATION PROCESS

In December 1999, Parliament passed the Geographical Indications of Goods (Registration and Protection) Act 1999. This Act seeks to provide for the registration and protection of Geographical Indications relating to goods in India. This Act is administered by the Controller General of Patents, Designs and Trade Marks, who is the Registrar of Geographical Indications. The Geographical Indications Registry is located at Chennai.

The Registrar of Geographical Indication is divided into two parts. Part 'A' consists of particulars relating to registered Geographical indications and Part 'B' consists of particulars of the registered authorized users. The registration process is similar to both for registration of geographical indication and an authorized user which is illustrated below:
